

Cromwellus ducitur Unco
Spectandus, gaudent omnes quæ labra quis Illi
Dultus erat _____ nunquam mihi credis amavi
Hunc Hominem _____ Ino sat

Cromwellus ducitur Unco
Spectandus, gaudent omnes quæ labra quis Illi
Dultus erat _____ nunquam mihi credis amavi
Hunc Hominem _____ Ino sat

Flagellum:

OR

The LIFE and DEATH, BIRTH and BURIAL
OF

O. Cromwell

The late URSURPER:
Faithfully Described.

WITH

An Exact Account of His Policies and Successes:

Not heretofore Published or Discovered.

The Fourth EDITION with Additions.

—Furto letatus inani

Distulit in seram commissa piacula mortem.

Virg. Æneid.

LONDON,

Printed by E. C. for Randall Taylor, and are to be sold at his Shop at the Crown in Little Britain. 1669.

18

Flasellum:

the LIFE and DEATH
BIRTH and BURIAL
OF

O. Cromwell

FH

MVSEVM
BRITANNICVM

To the READER.

HERE have been so many Vulgar Errors concerning this Person, and such mistakes of his Faculties and Natural Endowments, some being prone to Indulge Humanity, others to Ballance his great successes with his evil Designs, and the rest to abominate all; that I thought it worthy the present time, while those sad things we have suffered are yet recent in memory, and no lye dare be given to the Sun by an offuscation of Truth, to pursue his Life with this Memorial.

The World is not ignorant of Him, and yet those few that truly love Him, that is, Disturbances, and Troubles, have great Thoughts of Heart, as they phrase it, concerning Him; all the different Sects and Schisms, which He kept in perpetual separation and misunderstanding, now run into a coalition; and like Divided parcels of dying Vipers, Spraul towards a Union with this their Head.

But they will here find that poyson of Asps under his Lips, which as the Naturalists tell us, will envenome even those of the Species that come neer it, when it is cast upon the ground. No man either of Reason or Sobriety, of that party, can deny, but he was suck'd in by that Pestilent Air of his pious pretences, and therefore they will I hope accept of this Antidote for the future in good part.

Magna virtutes nec minora vitia, great Virtues and no lesse Vices have been adapted to most of the great men in the World, whose Interest held the Scale,

To the Reader.

for this was still the Imprint of ...

Ver Tigh Bou

To the Reader.

ery
htly
und

To the Reader.

for this was still the Impresse of just and rightful Monarchs, whom Posterity dare say no worse of, because no Better. But Tyrannies, and the enormous excesses thereof, leave no such exchange or Ballance of their Crimes, nor can their Policies, Craftiness, and Pretences commute with Prudence, Honesty, or Justice.

There hath been indeed an ingenious Essay to commend Richard the Third, and to extol him as an Excellent Prince, and this not from any other Authority but his Heroick and Famous Actions in the forreign and Civil Wars of those times: and if this Hector be measured by the same Standard, in length only and not in Breadth, by the Martial Feats of his Usurpation, he will make a better Subject for such a Pen 200. years hence, then Fate for some 100 of years, hath troubled the world with.

But when the world shall see that those Felicities of his Sword and Brain were derived from, and accountable solely to the just Judgment of God, who gave us up a deserved prey to the Spoiler; and that there was nothing Extraordinary in him but in the Sins and vengeance of the Times, he being the Scourge of our Iniquity, they will convert their admiration into a reverence of that Supreme over-ruling power.

It is a common but most observable Sentence of my Lord Chancellours, that the Malicious Influence of some Planets had caused this Horrible Defection and Feud among us: some ages more than other are infested with Trouble-worlds, Ours especially, for there have more Revolts, Defections, and Secesses been made in Europe, than for many Centuries before; not to mention the like commotions,

in

To the Reader.

in the nearest and farthest parts of Asia, the Turkish and the Chinese Empires.

In Europe, I place and reckon this Cromwel as a Medium or Mean, betwixt two almost his Contemporaries, Wallenstein Duke of Friesland the Emperors General, who from an obscure and wasted Barony rose to that Dignity, and thence aspired to the Imperial Diadem, but perished in the attempt; and Thomas Anello the famous Fisherman of Naples, who dyed in the frantick possession of the power he had so wonderfully attained to: for by a mixt adjument of Tumults, and Arms, and the Command upon the Rabble, and a mutinous disloyal Militia, did Cromwel usurp the Sovereignty, though he had the fortune (or we rather the Happiness) to dye in his Bed, after the fruition of his envied Greatness.

Tyrants are like plagues, and are well termed Pestes Humani Generis, they do not raign or rage alwaies in all Climes and Countries, but come like other wonders into the world; the variety whereof do for the present stupifie and afflict the World, and then leave matter of enquiry and discourse, to assist against the suddenness, and some other shaped violence (for seldom do they come in the same form) of another rupture and rebellion against Nature.

There was something different in this mans Tyranny from all former precedents, as there were stronger and stranger Corruptions of manners in the Times He lived, so that he seemed to be accommodated to them. Never were there such wilde speculations, (such dotages and caprichio's in point of Religion, which made half the Nation mad, and run with zeal to the ruin of their Countrey; Now the destructiveness of these Chimera's and Whimfies of Piety, that austere Sanctimony under which we laboured, could never better be discovered, than by the divine permission of this mans arrival and ascent to the Supreme power, thereby giving the world a Specimen of the deep mischief of pretended and morose Holyness.

To the Reader.

This is the design of this Biography of Oliver Cromwel, who hath been excellently shadowed in the lineaments of Agathocles the Syracusan Tyrant, but here he is drawn in his proper and due proportions. There are it must be confessed, some passages herein coincident with the Histories of the Times, which are borrowed thence; but generally there is very little which is not Novel altogether, and with which very few persons have been acquainted: as it is presumed, will appear to the Readers Satisfaction, who is desired candidly to excuse the tenuity of the Stile, in so ample and so Masculine a Subject, considering it is an Epitome and Abridgement, and to passe by or correct the Errata in the Printing.

Vale.

The

The Life and Death
OF
OLIVER CROMWELL
THE
Late USURPER, &c.

ATE, when it had decreed and ordain'd the unhappy birth of this Famoso, by her most secret and hidden malice brought him into the world without any terrible remark of his portentous Life, neither Comets, nor earthquakes, nor such like Violences of Nature, ushering or accompanying Him, to the declaring and pointing out, that the Scourge of the English Empire and Nation was now born; as she did by indiscernible methods train him up to the possession of the Throne, and as secretly and cunningly, after all his bloody and most nefarious actions, shift him out of it, and with a blast of her spent Fury, turned him into his wish'd for Grave.

Nor did she widwife him into this light, which he so horribly polluted, by any unusual preternacural or monstrous way, not with Teeth or Heels forward, or long hair, not with any marks upon his Flesh, as is storied of Julius Caesar, our Richard the Third, and others; nor were there any presagious dreams or fearful divinations of his Mother when she was impregnate with him, as is mentioned of several, who have proved like him to be the destruction and common Enemies of Mankind.

None of all these Signs revealed or discovered the abstruse, and most reserved deep and mysterious Fortune of this person, The subtleties, Arts, and Policies of his destiny, potently and irresistibly conspiring with his as close Treasons and dissembled treacheries, to the ruin and overthrow of this Church and State, singly and insensibly accomplished by the mean and unobserved Hand of this bold and perjurious politique.

All therefore that to this purpose is noted of him is this, that he was born the last year of that wonderful Century of 1500. to begin the next with his fatal Marvails, just before the union of the two Kingdoms of England and Scotland by King James; as if it were congenial to Crowns, as to other lesser accessions of Felicity in private persons, to have at the same instant a temperament and alloy to their lusture and greatnesse; that as fortunes right hand presented a Scepter, so her left hand was ready with a Scourge to wreak her Envy upon the glory and grandeur of that renowned succession to, and accrument of, Dominion.

Every thing hath its good and evil Angel to attend or haunt it, and that grand and happy revolution was to be afflicted and persecuted by this Fury to an almost dissolution of its well composed, united united, and established Frame.

He was born and descended of a very ancient Knightly Family of his name in the County of Huntingdon, where for many ages they have had a very large and plentiful patrimony; it will suffice therefore to deduce him from no further originals than Sir Henry Cromwel his Grandfather, a Gentleman highly honoured and beloved both in Court and Country, who had issue Sir Oliver his eldest Son, Henry, Robert, Richard, and Sir Philip the youngest, (whose Son upon suspicion of poysoning his Master a Lawyer, was accused thereupon and convicted, and hanged some 35 years ago.) This our Oliver Cromwel was Son of Mr. Rob. Cromwel the third Son of Sir Henry, a Gentleman who went no less in esteem and reputation than any of his Ancestors, for his personal worth, till his unfortunate production of this his Son and Heir, whom he had by his Wife Elizabeth Steward the Neice of Sir Robert Steward, a Gentleman of a competent Fortune in that Country, but of such a malign effect on the Course of this his Nephews Life, as hereafter shall be declared: that if all the Lands he gave him, (as some were Fenny Ground) had been irrecoverably lost and deluged, by any accident or disaster whatsoever, it might have past for a most propitious providential prevention of that dire mischief and miseries that Estate occasioned.

He was born April the 25. in St. Johns Parish in the Town of Huntingdon, and was Christned in that Church the 29. of the same Month Anno Domini 1599 where Sir Oliver Cromwel his Uncle gave him his name, being received into the bosome of the Church by her Rites and Ceremonies, both which he afterwards rent and tore, and ungraciously and impiously annulled and renounced.

From his Infancy to his Childhood he was of a crossie and peevish disposition, which, being humoured by the fondness of his Mother, made that rough and intractable temper more robust and outrageous in his juvenile years, and adult and Masterless at Mans-estate.

No sooner therefore had he obtained the use of his Tongue, but his Father, careful of his Education, sent him to School to learn the Elements of Language and principals of Religion; both which he studied with the same indifference, and inside and fallacious indeavour, as afterwards appeared by his never speaking what he thought, nor believing what he heard, or was instructed in: So that his main policy was a radical and original Hypocrisie, which growing up with him, could not but be at last after so many years of Experience most exquisitely perfected.

From this A. B. C. Discipline and the slighted Governance of a Mistriss, his Father removed him to the Tuition of Dr. Beard Schoolmaster of the Free-School of that Town: where his Book began to persecute him, and Learning to Commence his great and irreconcilable Enemy; for his Master honestly and severely observing that, and others his Faults (which like Weeds, sprung out of his rank and uncultivable nature) did by Correction hope to better his manners; and with a diligent Hand and careful Eye to hinder the thick growth of those Vices, which were so predominant and visible in him: yet though herein he trespassed upon that respect and leniry due and usual to Children ren of his Birth and quality; he prevailed nothing against his obstinate and perverse inclination. The Learning and Civility he had, coming upon him like fits of Enthusiasme, now a hard Student for a Week or two, and then a Truant or Otioso for twice as many Months; of no settled constancy; the very Tenour and mode of his future Life till his grand attainment.

Amongst the rest of those ill qualities which frustrated in him at this Age, He was very notorious for robbing of Orchards; a puerile crime and an ordinary trespass, but grown so scandalous and injurious by the frequent spoils and damages of Trees, breaking of Hedges and Inclosures, committed by this Apple-Dragon, that many solemn Complaints were made both to his Father and Master for redress thereof; which missed not their satisfaction and expiation out of his hide, on which so much pains were lost, that, that very offence ripened in him afterwards to the throwing down of all boundaries of Law or Conscience, and the stealing and tasting of the forbidden fruit of Sovereignty, by which (as the serpent told him) He should be like unto a God.

From this, he passed unto another more manly theft, the robbing of Dove-houses, stealing the young Pidgeons, and eating and merchandizing of them; and that so publicquely, that he became dreadfully suspect to all the adjacent Country: And this was an unhappy allusory Omen of his after Actions, when he Robb'd the King his Sovereign of his Innocence and Virtues, and prostituted them to the People and Souldiery, and made the World about him afraid of his Villanies.

'Twas

*Twas at this time of his Adoiescency , that he Dreamed, or a Familiar rather instincted him and put it into his Head, that He should be King of England; for it cannot be conceived , that now there should be any such neer resemblance of truth in Dreams and Divinations (besides the Confidence, with which he repeated it, and the difficulty to make him forget the Arrogant Conceit and opinionated pride he had of himself, doth seem to evince , it was some impulse of a Spirit) since they have ceased long ago. However the Vision came, most certain it is, that his Father was exceedingly troubled at it; and having angerly rebuked him for the Vanity, Idleness, and impudence thereof; and seeing him yet persist in the same presumption caused Dr. Beard to Whip him for it; which was done to no more purpose than the rest of his Chastisements, his Scholar growing insolent and incorrigible from those results and swasions within him, to which all other dictates and Instructions were useless, and as a dead letter.

Now to confirm this Royal humour the more in his ambitious and vain-glorious brain, it happened (as it was then generally the Custome in all great Free-schools) that a Play called The five Senses , was to be Acted by the Scholars of this School, and Oliver Cromwel , as a Confident Youth, was named to Act the part of Tactus the sense of Feeling ; in the personation of which as he came out of the Tying room upon the stage , his head encircled with a Chaplet of Lawrel, he stumbled at a Crown, purposely layd there, which stooping down he took up, and Crowned himself therewithal, adding beyond his Cue, some Majestical mighty words; and with

With this passage also the Event of his Life held good analogy and proportion, when he changed the Laurel of his Victories (in the late unnatural War) to all the Power, Authority, and Splendor that can be imagined within the Compass of a Crown.

Nevertheless the Relation of a Father, and one so stern and strict an Examiner of him, (he being in his own nature of a difficult disposition, and great Spirit, and one that would have due distances observed towards him from all persons, which begat him Reverence from the Countrey-people) kept him in some awe and subjection, till his Translation to Cambridge; where he was placed in Sydney Colledge, more to satisfy his Fathers curiosity and desire, than out of any hopes of compleating him in his Studies, which never reached any good knowledge of the Latine Tongue.

During his short residence here, where he was more famous for his Exercises in the Fields than in the Schools, (in which he never had the honour of because no worth and merit to, a degree) being one of the chief match-makers and players at Football, Cudgels, or any other boysterous sport or game; His Father Mr. Robert Cromwell died, leaving him to the scope of his own inordinate and irregular will, swayed by the bent of very violent and strong passions.

There is little to be said more of his Father, that is requisite to his Sons story, further than this, that whereas 'tis reported Oliver kept a Brew-house, that is a mistake; for the Brew-house was kept in his Fathers time, and managed by his Mother and his Fathers servants, without any concernment of either

either of these therein, the Accompts being always given to the Mistress; who after her Husband's death, did continue in the same Employment and Calling of a Brewer, and thought it no disparagement to sustain the Estate and port of a younger Brother, as Mr. Robert Cromwell was, by those lawful means; however, not so reputable as other gains and Trades are accounted.

It was not long after his Death, ere Oliver weary of the mules, and that strict course of life (though he gave latitude enough to it in his wild salleys and flyings out) abandoned the University, and returned Home, saluted with the Name of young Mr. Cromwell, now in the room and place of his Father; which how he became, his uncontrouled debaucheries did publicly declare; for Drinking, Wenching, and the like outrages of licentious youth, none so infamous as this young Tarquin, who would not be contraried in his Lusts, in the very strain and to the excess of that Regal Ravisher.

These pranks made his Mother advise with her self and his friends, what she should do with him, to remove the Scandal which had been cast upon the Family by his means; and therefore it was concluded to send him to one of the Inns of Court, under pretence of his studying the Laws: where among the mass of people in London, and frequency of Vices of all sorts, his might pass in the throng, without that particular neer reflection upon his relations, and at worst the infamy should stick only on himself.

Lincolns-Inn was the place pitch'd upon, and thither Mr. Cromwell in a suitable Garb to his fortunes was sent, where but for a very little while he continued, al-nd and ge-ge-ful ins

cagh nd
ed
w-ch
id
nd
n-ne

er
n,
n
s e
e f r
e inued ; for the nature of the place and the Studies there, were so farr regretful beyond all his regious Apprentiship to the more facile Academick Sciences, (by reason Laws were the Bar and obstacle of his impetuous resolutions, and the quite contrary to his loose and libertine spirit) that he had a kind of antipathy to his Company and Converse there ; and so spent his time in an inward spight, which for that space superseded the enormous extravagancy of his former vitiousness. His vices having a certain kind of intermission, succession, or transmigration, like a complete revolution of wickedness into one another, so that few of his Fears were practised here : And it is some kind of good Luck for that honourable Society, that he hath left so small and so innocent a memorial of his Membership therein.

His next traverse was back again into the Country to his Mother, and there he fell to his old trade, and frequented his old haunts, consumed his mony in tipling, and then ran on score per force : in his drink he used to be so quarrellsome as (few unless as mad as himself) durit keep him company ; his chief weapon in which he delighted, and at which he fought several times with Tinkers, Pedlers, and the like (who most an end go armed therewith) was a Quarterstaff ; in which he was so skilful, that seldome did any overmatch him. A boysterous discipline and Rudiment of his martial skill and valour, which with so much fierceness he manifested afterward in the ensuing War.

These and the like strange, wild, and dishonest actions, made him every where a shame or a terrour ; insomuch that the Ale-wives of Huntingdon
 and

and other places, when they saw him a coming would use to cry out to one another, Here comes young Cromwel, shut up your Doors: for he made it his Punctilio to invite his Roysters to a Barrel of Drink and give it them at the charge of his Host, and in satisfaction thereof either beat him, or break his Windows, if he offered any shew, or gave any look or sign of refusal or discontent.

His Lustful wantonnesses were not less predominant than the other unruly appetites of his mind; that there might no vice be wanting to make his Life a systeme of iniquity: the publique, open and more ingenious vilenesses of his Youth, becoming the several dangerous and cruel Villanies of his Old Age, it being now his rude custome, to seize upon all women he met in his way on the road, and perforce ravish a kiss, or some lewder satisfaction from them: and if any resistance were made by their Company, then to vindicate and allay this violence and heat of his blood, with the letting out of theirs, whose defence of their Friends Honour, and Chastity, innocently engaged them. And the same riots was he guilty of against any who would not give him the way; so that he was a Rebel in Manners, long before he was a Belial in Policy.

I am loath to be too large in such particulars, which may render me suspect of belying him, out of prejudice or revenge; but I have heard it confirmed so often from knowing persons, and the stories made use of by his Party, who did thereby magnifie his Conversion, making him thus dear and precious unto God, that I was obliged to mention them, partly as due to this Memoir of him, which pretends to an exact Biography, as well in the mi-

rate and small beginnings, as in the grand and most important Events of his Life ; and partly to set him as a remarque against all Satanical delusions of Instantaneous Sanctity ; with which yet at this very day the World is bewitched, though they have been in him the Tragical, and even Diabolical effects of his Religious Austerity.

Only one thing I may not omit : by these lewd actions he had so alienated the affections of his Uncle and Godfather Sir Oliver Cromwel, that he could not endure the sight of him, having in his own presence in the great Hall of his House, where he magnificently treated King James, at his assumption to the Crown of England, in a Christmas time, (which was always highly observed by him by Feasting, and keeping open house), played this unhandsome and unseemly trick or frolick ; with the Relation of which the Reader will be pleased to indulge me, because I have seen it r'accounted by a Worthy and Learned hand.

It was Sir Oliver's Custome in that Festival, to entertain in his House a Master of Mis-rule or the Revels, to make mirth for the Guests, and to direct the Dances and the Mulick, and generally all manner of Sports and Gambols ; this fellow, Mr. Cromwel having besmeared his own Cloths and hands with Surreverence, accosts in the midst of a frisking Dance, and so grimed him and others upon every turn, that such a stink was raised, that the Spectators could hardly endure the Room ; whereupon the said of Master of Mis-rule perceiving the matter, caused him to be laid hold on, and by his command to be thrown into a Pond adjoining to the House, and there to be sous'd over head and ears, and and rinsed of that filth and pollution sticking to him; which was accordingly executed, Sir Oliver suffering his Nephew to undergo the punishment of his unmannerly folly.

By this time, and by these wayes Oliver had run himself out of that little patrimony he had, and brought his Mother to the same near Ruine; when taking a sad prospect, from the brink of this destruction, of his present desperate condition, a giddy inspiration seized him, and all of a suddain so seemed to change and invert him, that he now became the wonder, who just before was the hissing and scorn of all people. And that this Conversion might seem true and real, he manifested it with the Publican first in the Temple, (the Church) which he devoutly and constantly frequented, affecting the Companies and Discourses of Orthodox Divines, no way given to that Schisme of Non-Conformity; into which Oliver soon after fell, not out of Seduction and Ignorance, but Sedition, and Malice, and treasonable design.

But this appearance of such a Reformation in him (as he no doubt forecast it) did effectually conduce to his present purpose; for these Reverend Divines, glad of the return of this Prodigal, made it their business to have him received and welcomed with the fatted Calf, to remove the prejudices that lye upon the objected narrowness of Christianity: and therefore severally and joynly they deal with Sir Robert Steward his Uncle (for Sir Oliver would by no means hear of him, as being assured and confirmed against him out of some good hints certainly of his own observation) to take him into his favour: and did at last prevail so upon him, that he declared him his Heir, and;

 dying soon after, left him an Estate of Four or five hundred pounds a year; which being got and obtained by so impious a practise, a kind of inverted Symony, to purchase Lands by Counterfeit Gifts and Graces, could not escape the canker of Sacriledge; but in few years mouldred away piece-meal, nothing at all remaining thereof but a Thacht House, with some Lands of Forty or fifty pounds a year, in a Town called Wells, within four miles of Wisbitch in the Isle of Ely.
 In the Interval of this Estate, having served himself of those Venerable Divines, he fell in with some of the preciser sort; began to shew himself at Lectures, to entertain such Preachers at his house, to Countenance that way, and be very Zealous in all meetings of such People, which then began to be frequent and numerous; and to exercise with them by Praying and the like; to estrange himself from those his benefactors; and at last to appear a publique Dissentor from the Discipline of the Church of England. He had matched, a little before, upon the account of this estate in Reversion, with a Kinswoman of Mr. Hambdens, and Mr.
Goodwins of Buckinghamshire, by Name Elizabeth, Daughter of one Sir James Bowcher, whom he trained up and made the waiting Woman of his Providences, and Lady-rampant of his successful greatness, which she personated afterwards as Imperiously as himself; so did the Incomb of his Bed make her partaker too in the pleasures of the Throne. These Men eminent for Puritanisme, together with their Preachers set him up as the prime man of his County, for Religion, Integrity, and true Godliness.

But his Estate still decaying, he betook himself at last to a Farm, being parcel of the Royalty of St. Ives; where he intended to Husband it, and try what could be done by endeavour, since nothing (as yet) succeeded by Design: and accordingly, took Servants, and bought him all Utensils and Materials, as Ploughs, Carts, &c. and the better to prosper his own and his Mens Labour, every morning before they stirred out, the Family was called together to Prayers, at which Exercise, very often, they continued so long, that it was nine of the Clock in the morning before they began their work; which awkward beginning of their Labour sorted with a very sorry Issue; for the effect of those Prayers was, that the Hinds and Plowmen seeing this zeal of their Master, which dispensed with the profitable and most commodious part of the Day for their labour, thought they might borrow the other part for their pleasure; and therefore commonly they went to plough with a pack of Cards in their Pockets, and having turned up two or three Furrows, set themselves down to game till dinner time; when they returned to the second part of their Devotion, and measured out a good part of the afternoon with Dinner, and a repetition of some Market Lecture that had been preached the day before. And that little work that was done, was done so negligently and by halves, that scarce half a Crop ever reared it self upon his Grounds; so that he was (after five years time) glad to abandon it, and get a friend of his to be the Tenant for the remainder of his time.

During his continuance here, he was grown (that is pretended to be) so just, and of so scrupulous a Conscience, that having some years before won 300 pounds of one Mr. Calton at play, meeting him accidentally, he desired him to come home with him and to receive his money, telling him that he had got it by indirect and unlawful means, and that it would be a sin in him to detain it any longer ; and did really pay the Gentleman the said thirty pounds back again.

Pounds

Now was he therefore thinking of transporting himself and his Family into New-England, a receptacle of the Puritan, who flocked thither again, for Liberty of Conscience : But he indeed, for that his purse and credit were so exhausted that he could no longer stay here. Which resolution he had taken up before the Estate of his Uncle fell to him, and was put aside it, by the amplitude of that Fortune to maintain him here : and that at last (though wasted and gone) rendred him a Candidate for the ensuing Parliament, and supplied him before with the Ability of disbursing 500 l. upon account of Irish Adventures towards the settling a Plantation in Ulster, in that Kingdome. Yet was this the very last remains of that accessional Inheritance, he being forced to borrow in Town here very precariously and by the mediation of friends (though no greater sum than (10 pounds, (nay formerly ten shillings were acceptable) at several times, which he received with this inducing Expression ; That though sometime he had made no conscience of repaying any money, yet he would punctually now keep his word : which indeed he did justly observe ; and this an Eminent Citizen his Friend and School-fellow hath often declared. The last sum he borrowed being very anxiously besought and intreated, as rising to a 100 l. which upon his growing Greatness pleased him, and was most abusefully imployed in hyring Wagons for the Earl of Essex's Army, then advancing against the King. To this constant and insuperable indigency and ebbe of Fortune was he kept and decreed to the brink of our Troubles, that his ruines and private misery might the more industriously force him to the reparation of them, by the publick calamities, and then carry him to the mixt Affluence and Excesses of wealth and State-Usurpation.

In this new Conversation and change, he was grown so cunning, as to comply with those silent modes of Kindnesses and private conveyances of Friendships, which imported him a great deal more than he exported, for he was very much in the esteem of the best of the Faction.

Nor did he omit any other duty or civility, or Office of love to any, especially to those of the Household, as they then termed the people of the Separation; insomuch that he had scrued himself into the affections of many well-meaning people, whose assistance he obtained against his use for it in his election to the long Parliament; of which presently.

He was a great stickler likewise against Ship-money, in which danger his great friend and Patron Mr. Hambden was so far embarked: nor was he better affected to the Scotch War, then growing on, as he to his hazard discovered himself to some chief Commanders of the English Army, who in their march against the Scots quartered at his house; which Discourses drawing suspicion upon him, made him the more popular in those parts which were generally infected with Puritanisme.

About

About the same time on Mr. Bernards coming to be Recorder of the Town of Huntingdon, some difference about precedency of place happened between them, (Oliver's Spirit being too high to yield to any person in that Town, where his Family had continued of the best rank some years together) and therefore to avoid the Cession of his Honour to another, he withdrew himself into the Isle of Ely, where he more frequently and publickly owned himself a Teacher, and did Preach in other mens as well as in his own house, according as the Brotherhood agreed and appointed.

While he continued here in this fashion, there were discourses of new Writs issuing out for the Parliament in 1640. and about the same time or a little before, it was the hap of one Richard Tymes since Alderman of Cambridge, and a man generally known throughout all the late times, having fate in all the Juncto's thereof, to be at a Coventicle, (as he usually every Sunday rode to the Isle of Ely to that purpose, having a brother who entertained them in his course) where he heard this Oliver, with such admiration, that he thought there was not such a precious man in the Nation; and took such a liking to him, that from that time he did nothing but ruminate and meditate on the man and his Gifts.

And by this slender wire was such an Engine moved, that afterwards tore up the Church and State; that the Reader will perceive his solicitous busie Fate cast alwaies about to compass her design of his advancement: and all by such uncouth and strange passes, such unexpected and ungovern'd contingency of things, that she hath left him as the only Example, whom by the meanest Offices and

But his Estate still decaying, he betook himself at last to a Farm, being parcel of the Royalty of St. Ives; where he intended to Husband it, and try what could be done by endeavour, since nothing (as yet) succeeded by Design : and accordingly, took Servants, and bought him all Utensils and Materials, as Ploughs, Carts, &c. and the better to prosper his own and his Mens Labour, every morning before they stirred out, the Family was called together to Prayers, at which Exercise, very often, they continued so long, that it was nine of the Clock in the morning before they began their work; which awkward beginning of their Labour sorted with a very sorry Issue; for the effect of those Prayers was, that the Hinds and Plowmen seeing this zeal of their Master, which dispensed with the profitable and most commodious part of the Day for their labour, thought they might borrow the other part for their pleasure; and therefore commonly they went to plough with a pack of Cards in their Pockets, and having turned up two or three Furrows, set themselves down to game till dinner time; when they returned to the second part of their Devotion, and measured out a good part of the afternoon with Dinner, and a repetition of some Market Lecture that had been preached the day before. And that little work that was done, was done so negligently and by halves, that scarce half a Crop ever reared it self upon his Grounds; so that he was (after five years time) glad to abandon it, and get a friend of his to be the Tenant for the remainder of his time.

During his continuance here, he was grown (that is pretended to be) so just, and of so scrupulous a Conscience, that having some years before won 30. Pounds

pounds of one Mr. Calton at play, meeting him accidentally, he desired him to come home with him and to receive his money, telling him that he had got it by indirect and unlawful means, and that it would be a sin in him to detain it any longer ; and did really pay the Gentleman the said thirty pounds back again.

Now was he therefore thinking of transporting himself and his Family into New-England, a receptacle of the Puritan, who flocked thither amain, for Liberty of Conscience : But he indeed, for that his purse and credit were so exhausted that he could no longer stay here. Which resolution he had taken up before the Estate of his Uncle fell to him, and was put aside it, by the amplitude of that Fortune to maintain him here : and that at last (though wasted and gone) rendred him a Candidate for the ensuing Parliament, and supplied him before with the Ability of disbursing 500 l. upon account of Irish Adventures towards the settling a Plantation in Ulster, in that Kingdome. Yet was this the very last remains of that accessional Inheritance, he being forced to borrow in Town here very precariously and by the mediation of friends (though no greater sum than (10 pounds, (nay formerly ten shillings were acceptable) at several times, which he received with this inducing Expression ; That though sometime he had made no conscience of repaying any money, yet he would punctually now keep his word : which indeed he did justly observe ; and this an Eminent Citizen his Friend and School-fellow hath often declared. The last sum he borrowed being very anxiously besought and intreated, as rising to a 100 l. which upon his growing Greatness pleased him, and was most abusefully employed in hyring Wagons for the Earl of Essex's Army, then advancing against the King. To this constant and insuperable indigency and ebbe of Fortune was he kept and decreed to the brink of our Troubles, that his ruines and private misery might the more industriously force him to the reparation of them, by the publick calamities, and then carry him to the mixt Affluence and Excesses of wealth and State-Usurpation.

In this new Conversation and change, he was grown so cunning, as to comply with those silent modes of Kindnesses and private conveyances of Friendships, which imported him a great deal more than he exported, for he was very much in the esteem of the best of the Faction.

Nor did he omit any other duty or civility, or Office of love to any, especially to those of the Household, as they then termed the people of the Separation; insomuch that he had scrved himself into the affections of many well-meaning people, whose assistance he obtained against his use for it in his election to the long Parliament; of which presently.

He was a great stickler likewise against Ship-money, in which danger his great friend and Patron Mr. Hamden was so far embarked: nor was he better affected to the Scotch War, then growing on, as he to his hazard discovered himself to some chief Commanders of the English Army, who in their march against the Scots quartered at his house; which Discourses drawing suspicion upon him, made him the more popular in those parts which were generally infected with Puritanisme.

About

About the same time on Mr. Bernayds coming to be Recorder of the Town of Huntingdon, some difference about precedency of place happened between them, (Oliver's Spirit being too high to yield to any person in that Town, where his Family had continued of the best rank some years together) and therefore to avoid the Cession of his Honour to another, he withdrew himself into the Isle of Ely, where he more frequently and publicly owned himself a Teacher, and did Preach in other mens as well as in his own house, according as the Brotherhood agreed and appointed.

While he continued here in this fashion, there were discourses of new Writs issuing out for the Parliament in 1640. and about the same time or a little before, it was the hap of one Richard Tymes since Alderman of Cambridge, and a man generally known throughout all the late times, having fate in all the Juncto's thereof, to be at a Conventicle, (as he usually every Sunday rode to the Isle of Ely to that purpose, having a brother who entertained them in his course) where he heard this Oliver, with such admiration, that he thought there was not such a precious man in the Nation; and took such a liking to him, that from that time he did nothing but ruminate and meditate on the man and his Gifts.

And by this slender wire was such an Engine moved, that afterwards tore up the Church and State; that the Reader will perceive his sollicitous busie Fate cast alwaies about to compass her design of his advancement: and all by such uncouth and strange passes, such unexpected and ungovern'd contingency of things, that she hath left him as the only Example, whom by the meanest Offices and

Artifices and Pragmatick insinuations she ever raised to any such sublimity.

For this Richard Tymes before the Writs were issued out (in which time he had opportunity of hearing Oliver once and again) began to hammer in his head a project of getting him chosen a Burgess for Cambridge, himself being then but one of the 24. and with this device he presently repaired to one Mr. Wildbore a Draper, a Kinsman of Cromwells and a Non-conformist likewise; and after some commendatory language of Oliver, propounded to him the chooling of him Burgess; to which Wildbore answered that it was impossible, because he was no Freeman of the Town.

This almost dashed the Project: notwithstanding as he was returning home, his mind gave him to ask the advice of his Neighbour Ibbot a Tallow-chandler, whom he found working in his Frock, and who gave him the same answer: and thereupon Tymes concluded to surcease the design, and departed. But before he was far from the house, Ibbot, hankering after the business, had thought of an expedient, and caused him to be called back, when he told him, that the Mayor had power to make a Freeman, and saith he, you know Mr. Kitchenman the Attorney (who was a Puritan likewise) he and the Mayor have married two Sisters; It is possible he may persuade his Brother to confer his Freedom upon Mr. Cromwel, and to that purpose you, and I, & Mr. Wildbore will go to Mr. Kitchenmans presently, and speak to him about the business, but the Mayor must not know the reason and design of it; for he is a perfect Royallist.

Accordingly they three went to Kitchenmans, laid

laid open the worth of Cromwel, and easily engaged him in the Plot; the same night he went to the Mayors, by name Alderman French, and finding him at supper, without more ado acquainted him with his business, told him that one Mr. Cromwel had a mind to come and dwell in the Town, but first he would be made a Freeman, that he was a deserving Gentleman, and that he would be an honour and support to the Town, which was full of poor; and many more good Morrows: to which the Mayor answered that he was sorry he could not comply with his desires, for he had engaged his Freedome already to the Kings Fisherman, and could not recede from his word; whereto Kitchinman presently replied, Brother, do you give your Freedom to Mr. Cromwel, I'll warrant and take upon me that the Town shall give a Freedome to the said Fisherman, and with some other words perswaded the unwary Mayor to consent.

All this while Cromwel was utterly ignorant what had been transacted at Cambridge, but now *Tym*s sent him word, that in order to make him a Burgess, he with his party had procured a Freedom from the Mayor; that therefore he should not fail to be there the next Court day. This message Cromwel received with a like gladness and wonder, and not to be wanting to the Industry and zeal of the Faction, came privately to Cambridge the day before, and took up his lodging at one Almond's a Grocer.

Next day the Court being sate, the Ma. rose up, as the manner is, and declaring that he had conferred his Freedome upon a right worthy Gentleman, Mr. Cromwel, using the same Character of him which he had received from Kitchingman; and hereupon a mace was sent to bring Cromwel into the Court, who came thither in a Scarlet Coat layed with a broad Gold Lace, and was there seated, then sworn and saluted by the Mayor, Aldermen, and the rest with, Welcome Brother. In the mean while Cromwel had caused a good quantity of Wine to be brought into the Town-house, (with some Confectionary-stuffe) which was liberally filled out, and as liberally taken off, to the warming of most of their Noddles; when Tyns and the other three spread themselves among the Company, and whispered into their Ears, Would not this man make a brave Burgesse for the ensuing Parliament? which being still'd in, with the merry juyce gratis and plentifully given them, could not but have a kind operation in the next occasion: and a fortnight after another Common Hall was called for the said Election of Burgessees, where was first named Mr. Lowry, who carried it by the general suffrage, after him one Mr. Mutis a Councillor, and he had the Votes of a great many, all of them Royalists; lastly our O-liver was named, and the Faction bauld as if they were mad, and by plurality of voyces carried it clear from Mr. Mutis.

When the Mayor now perceived the Jig, and how Kitchingman had fooled him, he could have pulled the Hair off his Head: but the thing was remediless, he was legally chosen; for the Faction had brought men thither, that had left off their Gowns for 30 years together. In the mean while the Zealots Triumphed that they had got such a Champion, and indulged their bellies at his Cost, most of which he borrowed, while by this means the Kingdome had one Viper more fostered, to the exenterating of her bowels,

Before I leave this Subject, I must inform the Reader, that the Commissioners of the late Act for Corporations coming to Cambridge, and, having displaced Alderman *Tym*s and others for not abjuring the Covenant, did likewise put the same abjuration to Alderman French then Mayor in 1663. again, who had wheeled from his Loyalty during the War who very frankly renounced it, and by it supposed and hoped to continue in his Majoralty; but the Commissioners, coming to understand this story of Oliver, three days after sent for his Mace, and within three dayes after he dyed with the conceit of the Businesse.

Having now attained his desire and aims, which was to help to blow up those Coals of dissention and rage, which had kindled in the breast of his malecontent party so long, and now were like to have free vent to the setting the Kingdomes into a conflagration; like a right incendiary, where he found any grievance complained of, he would make himself a party concerned in it, enquire into the number and strength of the Faction that managed the Complaint, proffer his and his friends assistance, encourage them to clamour against the male-administration, and generally set a foot those mischievous peritions, which were brought thick and threefold to the Parliament; till his Faction had so exasperated the King against them, that there seemed no possibility of reconciling them, making even all the Kings most earnest endeavors for an accommodation, arguments of refusing it. And though at first he was none of the principal of the Cabal, being taken in and tutor'd by Mr. *Tym*s and Hambden, (as finding him of a bold and undertaking Spirit Spirit of what mischief soever was propounded to him) yet was he notably and highly instrumental and subservient to the Conspiracy; and at last arose to such a knowledge and capacity of the mystery, that he scorn'd their puny rudiments, when with a deeper Atheisme he set up for himself.

The determinate time was now come, for which the Cabal of the Puritan had so long laboured; and that none of those things which had been so direfully Prophesied of their Schisme (if it ever should attain any power or prevalency) might want, or rather not exceed belief; The whole Kingdome of a suddain, as if some magical Charm had transform'd the State and shape of it, seemed rather a Scene or boscaje of wilde and bruta Creatures, than a Governed or civill Community. But because this particular hath been so largely treated of, and is yet fresh in memory, and will hardly ever be forgotten; it will not be much material to urge it further unless to the maintenance of this Maxime; That the Uproars and Rebellions of Subjects, upon what pretense soever, do alwaies end in the greatest Tyrannies, and turn to their most unsufferable and ignominious miseries; and that their Darling Demagogues, whom with Applauses and Arms they have shouldred up, and have reared and exalted above the reach of the Law, make it no nicety afterwards to trample upon the Necks of their raisers; and to swim in their Blood, whose itching swell'd their ambition to the Throne.

Nor did the Volge know when, or could their Bontefous tell where to cease, what Issue would happen of these their troubles; Rash and blind Furies, that made way to the unobserved advancement of

of this private Male-content; who, like Marius from his lurking holes in the Fens of Minturna after the defeat of his fortunes, crept into the Supreme Power, and died his purple with a more indelible tincture of Noble and Plebeian blood.

The Jealousies and Fears and the like picques and quarrelling pretenses of the Parliament proving hopeles of reconciliation or accommodation by the artifices of a Faction, wherein Mr. Pym, Hambden, and other Puissnes with Cromwel, mainly busied themselves: and the just Judgment of God giving us up, our Peace, Prosperity and Plenty to the Calamity of a most unnatural War: the long desired occasion and expectation of those, who had lodg'd their private hopes in the Common Ruine, did most gladsomely salute the Designs of Oliver; who, having spent the utmost Farthing of his Estate, and secured from an Imprisonment by his privilege as a Member, was one of the first of those adventurous Knights that mounted the Good Cause behind them, and so took the field; which now Ploughed with Swords and Spears, and watered with Blood, answered its long denied increase, and from a luckless Pesant made him a fortunate Pedant Prince.

For Enyo no sooner sounded her Trumpets under the Earl of Exffex's Banners then entitled Generalissimo for the King and Parliament, but Cromwell offered him his Service, and was thereupon honoured with a Commission of Captain of Horse; which to raise, he returned to his own County of Huntington: where among the Zealots he was never had in greater Estimation. He was also named a Commissioner in the Ordinance for the Militia, for that and the neighbouring Shires then entering into an Association against the King, the Ground-work and eminent endeavour of this great Conspirator, in pursuance of that rebellious Project of his party at Westminster; following herein the practice of all Ringleaders, who do first collect Rabbles, and engage and assure places of retreat and fastness to all Events, though herein he practiced the more difficult and unprecedented combination of a people, for Wealth, and Sobriety, and Civility, and (for a great part most contrary to his Designs) little to be suspected of taking part with him. But it so luckily evened to him, that by his lopping off, as it were, this Limb of the Kingdome, and depriving the King thereby of any assistance thence, and of the convenience of the Ports of those Eastern Counties for any forraign supplies, one Canton of the Kingdome was as planet-struck in point of Allegiance, and not only a Member.
for

——— Mancum & inutile dextra, Persf.

but of a very sinister consequence to the Royal Cause, the Gangrene thereof spreading and diffusing it self through the whole Masse of the Nation, by feeding the Humourous rage of the War through the whole distemper thereof, till it finally consumed all; this being the abundant Magazine of men and Horses for the Parliament Service.

This therefore was Cromwell's first Province or Superintendency, wherein he exercised the original Office of a Major General, when as yet he founded no more than a Captain, being the chief Committee-man of the Association, making himself self most notably eminent by his Activity and zealous industry in promoting the Good Cause, and levying and lifting of Forces, and Disciplining them, the skill whereof he had presently learned, from an exact observation of some veteran Commanders, viz. Colonel Dolbier, whom he had by great sums of advance money, and as extraordinary pay allured to his side.

The grosse of those Troops he raised here and sent from this Seminary to the Camp and School of Action, were such, whose dull Spirits were to be beaten into the knowledge of Arms, and like the Turks Alapi were on purpose sent thither to blunt the Weapons of the Kings generous Cavalry, and thereby to beget in them a relasch and contemptuous neglect of so base and dispicable an Enemy: that such their secure confidence might conclude their ruine. He himself was all the while continued by especial Order of Parliament in this Employment, like an Independent Commander, to have an Eye upon any Attempts that might be made thereabouts, and as a Purer and preciser reserve to the mixed multitude, that then from the equal motives of pay and zealotry rusht into the War.

And therefore Oliver, understanding how miserably the Cavalry fresh men of his party were worsted at every Encounter, and well knowing the nature of the Quarrel (which was pretended for Religion) resolved and advised, that there were no men so likely to oppose the conquering Gallantry of those Gentlemen on the Kings side, than such who were or should be engaged upon account of Conscience and Zeal, which

which would spirit them with the same magnanimous Fortitude, and make them also to endure the difficulties and hardships of the War with a more pertinacious Constancy ; as having bodies better able, and minds more finely sublimed upon that score pro aris & focis, than the mixed and most rascally Herd of loose and vicious people.

But yet prudently considering, that in so long an interval and vacancy of War, from which this Nation had been blessed, the most forwardst Hotspurs on the account of Zeal might quale and shrink at the noise of the Battel, and their spiritual proud courage abate at the encounter, and never desie a Cavalier again after one dismal alarm and fright of a discomfiture ; He would first prove and try his Troopers how they could endure a sudden terror and by that grow hardy to the constancy of danger: (as Eagles certifie themselves of the genuine race of their young ones, by their experiencing how they can out-stare and brave the Sun, and initiate them with a bold and passive Fortitude, the Hardy Rudiments of their fighting predatory life ;) for as he relyed on one hand upon their Religious Resolution and Spiritual valour, so did he not reject the Arm of Flesh, which should actuate those inward impulses, and by a just temperament of both to a true metal, conduct and menage their sober and well governed bravery to an assurance of Success and Victory ; and such whose hearts failed, he resolved to dismount them, and give their Horses to more couragious Riders. This he did by a Stratagem upon the first muster of his Troop ; when having privily placed 12. resolute men in an ambuscado, (it being near some of the Kings Garrisons) upon a signal

nal or the appointed time, the said Ambush with a Trumpet sounding a charge, galloped furiously to the Body, out of which some 20. instantly fled out fear and dismay, and were glad the forfeiture was so cheap and easie, and ashamed of their childish and disgraceful deserting of their Station and Colours had not the Confidence to request their continuance in his service, or deny or scruple the rendring their Horses to them who should fight the Lords Battel in their stead.

His next design upon the place was to make a convenient Garrison thereabouts, which should as well respect his forces security, as the annoyance of the Kings; and therefore he pitcht upon Whittlesea, where a Bridge joyns the County of Norfolke with the Isle of Ely, and no other passages from thence into Lincoln-shire, most whereof was Garrison'd by the Royal Party: and by this means he did first prevent and cut off all intercourse betwixt the Loyal Gentlemen of both; advised and assisted herein by Iveton, who first came to his acquaintance in this place, and was afterwards famous for his nimble Seizure of some Gentlemen at Burleigh-House near Grantham.

Against the dangerous evil of this Association, the King directed His Commission of Array, which was first put in execution in Hartfordshire by Sir Henry Conisby High Sheriff of that County, who proclaimed it at St. Albans, and intended to raise the County to the Kings Assistance; but by the vigilance of Oliver Cromwel, the Design was prevented. For by that time the Members at Westminster had notice of Sir Henry's Loyal endeavour, Cromwel with a party of Horse had surprized and sei-

seized that party almost in the very instant of their appearance, and sent Sir Henry, and some other prime Gentlemen engaged with him Prisoners to London, to the great satisfaction and liking of the Parliament Grandees, who were at first agast at an attempt made for the King so near their own dores: and thereupon this their Commander was ordered the Thanks of the House, and from thence forward look'd upon as an eminent person, and a Champion of the Cause, which now jeopardd it in the field: whence the towardly Settlement of these parts withheld Cromwel in this Province, which like a parcel of the former Heptarchy he himself ruled and governed absolutely and pro imperio.

His next piece of Service was of the like nature, and of the same evil Consequence to the King. For divers Gentlemen of the County of Suffolk (another of the associated Counties) resenting this Curb upon their Allegiance, and sawcy Edicts and Commands of the Committees, which were made up of the meanest of the Gentry, and Burgesses of the Towns, designed together to free themselves and their country from the yolk of these new Lords: the chief of these Gentlemen were Sir John Petus, Sir Edward Baker, &c. who having, in order to their Conjunction, rendezvouzed at Lower-stoft in that County, were by the preventing diligence of Cromwel seized and secured, and thereby such a Break-neck given to any future Royal undertakings in those parts (the rendition of Lyn Regis, which then held for the King, soon after following this defeat and disappointment) that throughout the whole course of the war, there happened not any the least commotion in favour of His Majesties Arms

Arms, either by supply, assistance, or diversion.

Things being thus quieted thereabouts and disposed to the interest of the Juncto, there remained after the Military part, a Scholastical labour for this Parliamentary Hercules, the zealous cleansing of the University of Cambridge, the Parent of this Viper, who just before his infectious production into the main Army, (whither he was now designed) did miserably exenterate her, leaving her a sad and doleful Skeleton, deprived of so many learned and religious persons, whose only Charge was, that they adhered to the dictates of their Conscience, and the Obligation of those Oaths, which just Authority had enjoined, against those novel and illegal Commands and Covenants, forcibly imposed and obtruded on them. In this destructive work, his module and method of Ambition, Cromwel was mainly and chiefly active, as also against the Orthodox and Protestant Ministry, and their Churches, defacing all the Ornaments and Beauty thereof, leaving them the ruinous Spectacle of his Reformation.

And from this Employment now finished, he was Commissioned Lieutenant General to the Earl of Manchester, who had the separate Command in a distinct Supremacy of these associated Counties, and was designed to march Northwards with those Forces and joyn with the Scots newly entred England, and the Lord Fairfax against the Marquis of New castle, who was General for the Kings in those parts, and yet ballanced the Fortune of the War against that potent Scotch Invasion, but upon the conjuncture and addition of the Earl of Manchester's fresh and well disciplined and armed forces, the said Marquis was constrained to quit the field, and distribute his Army, into the Garrisons, he himself shutting up the best part of it in the City of York, which the Confederates presently besieged, and made several venturous attempts, wherein Cromwell was none of the backwardest, though alwayes repulsed with losse and considerable slaughter.

The importance of this place, and juncture of time, which either won or lost the North to the King (who had newly had great success in the west by the defeating of the Earl of Essex at Lestithiell in Cornwall) caused him to send away Prince Rupert as Generalissimo, with a very potent Army to raise that Siege, and fight the Enemy if he found occasion. The Prince accordingly advanced, and upon his approach the Confederates drew off from their League, affording the Garrison liberty to joyn with their friends: when it was resolved by the Prince, without any delay to give battel; though the Marquess knowing what hazard the Kings Interest, and his own, and all the Loyal parties Estates would thereby be put to, did very much diswade the suddenness of the Encounter: which notwithstanding ensued on the evening of the same day July 2. on Marston-moor within three miles of York, and lasted till dark night.

Here in the beginning the Scots and my Lord Fairfaxes forces were totally routed and pursued some miles out of the field, and the day given for lost; when Crom. with his associated Horse, most of them Curassiers in the left Wing, seeing this discomfiture, fell on with great resolution and courage, and worsted the Prince and his Reserves; and with the

the same fury fell upon the Marquisses foot, whose Regiment of White-Coats, and therefore called his Lambs, yet stood, and could not be broken, till the field being almost cleared, the Parliaments Infantry came up, and then both horse and foot charged and broke them. Cromwel here made a very great slaughter and Carnage, especially in the rout and pursuit, purposely to make his name terrible; this being his first and grand appearance, gaining here the Title of Ironsides, from the impenetrable strength of his Troops, which could by no means be broken or divided. Being here at the first charge of the Cannon, endangered with a grasing shot, feared by his Men to be hurt therewith, He replied merrily, A Miss is as good as a Mile.

The success of this day made him indeed highly famous, and his Laurels most verdent and flourishing, the victory being principally ascribed to his courage and conduct. His Cunctation and temperate delay were highly magnified; and then his Resolution in the desperation of the event extolled the firmness and constant equality of his mind: when intrepidly and fixedly he beheld the overthrow of the gross of their Army, and thereby animated his Troops to the more vigorous recovery of the day, now that the adverse fury was spent in the chase of their Fellows the Scots, whom Cromwel ever afterwards though in Covenant with them, most disdainfully despised, but not only for this reason.

The credit of this Achievement was industriously cried up at Westminster, and all the Grandezza's of Scriptural Ovation fitted & accommodated thereto; He himself with the same conquering Troops, as yet in the same quality under the Earl of Manchester, forces, the said Marquis was constrained to quit the field, and distribute his Army, into the Garrisons, he himself shutting up the best part of it in the City of York, which the Confederates presently besieged, and made several venturous attempts, wherein Cromwell was none of the backwardest, though alwayes repulsed with losse and considerable slaughter.

The importance of this place, and juncture of time, which either won or lost the North to the King (who had newly had great success in the west by the defeating of the Earl of Essex at Lestithiell in Cornwall) caused him to send away Prince Rupert as Generalissimo, with a very potent Army to raise that Siege, and fight the Enemy if he found occasion. The Prince accordingly advanced, and upon his approach the Confederates drew off from their League, affording the Garrison liberty to joyn with their friends: when it was resolved by the Prince, without any delay to give battel; though the Marquess knowing what hazard the Kings Interest, and his own, and all the Loyal parties Estates would thereby be put to, did very much diswade the suddenness of the Encounter: which notwithstanding ensued on the evening of the same day July 2. on Marston-moor within three miles of York, and lasted till dark night.

Here in the beginning the Scots and my Lord Fairfaxes forces were totally routed and pursued some miles out of the field, and the day given for lost; when Crom. with his associated Horse, most of them Curassiers in the left Wing, seeing this discomfiture, fell on with great resolution and courage, and worsted the Prince and his Reserves; and with the

the same fury fell upon the Marquisses foot, whose Regiment of White-Coats, and therefore called his Lambs, yet stood, and could not be broken, till the field being almost cleared, the Parliaments Infantry came up, and then both horse and foot charged and broke them. Cromwel here made a very great slaughter and Carnage, especially in the rout and pursuit, purposely to make his name terrible; this being his first and grand appearance, gaining here the Title of Ironsides, from the impenetrable strength of his Troops, which could by no means be broken or divided. Being here at the first charge of the Cannon, endangered with a grasing shot, feared by his Men to be hurt therewith, He replied merrily, A Miss is as good as a Mile.

The success of this day made him indeed highly famous, and his Laurels most verdent and flourishing, the victory being principally ascribed to his courage and conduct. His Cunctation and temperate delay were highly magnified; and then his Resolution in the desperation of the event extolled the firmness and constant equality of his mind: when intrepidly and fixedly he beheld the overthrow of the gross of their Army, and thereby animated his Troops to the more vigorous recovery of the day, now that the adverse fury was spent in the chase of their Fellows the Scots, whom Cromwel ever afterwards though in Covenant with them, most disdainfully despised, but not only for this reason.

The credit of this Achievement was industriously cried up at Westminster, and all the Grandezza's of Scriptural Ovation fitted & accommodated thereto; He himself with the same conquering Troops, as yet in the same quality under the Earl of Manchester, chester, was remanded from the North to oppose the King, then returning victorious out of the West; and because the Earl of Essex had hitherto been unfortunate, therefore this lucky Chieftain was added as his better Star, at the second Battel of Newbury, within four Months after Marston-Moor; and here again the Fates favoured him, though not with a complete Victory, yet on that side where he fought with a part of one, and so much as endangered the person of the King, if the noble and stout Earl of Cleveland had not hazardously interposed, and bore off the pursuit.

This indifference of Fortune begot very great differences among the Parliament Commanders, one Taxing the other of Neglect, Treachery, or Cowardize, and by what means it could come to pass that nothing was yet effected against the King, whom in the beginning of the War they had thought to have swallowed up presently. Nor were the divisions less at home than in the camp, for now the younger Brother of the Rebellion, the Independent Faction began to appear; a preciser and severer sort of Zealots, who thought Essex and his Army not righteous enough, nor fit instruments, in whose hands the work of Reformation should ever be blessed to an attainment, and that therefore it was fit the Army should be purged of such Officers, or the Cause would never prosper. To the same purpose Oliver was tampering with his Myrmidons, frequently bewailing the want of Faith and Grace in the heart of the Soldiery, which alone retarded the desired conclusion, that the great men of the Army minded themselves more than God or his people, and that purposely they protracted the war, not sparing to insinuate his own General the Earl of Manchester of the same prevarications, aggravating the affront he received before Dennington-Castle, and some other later miscarriages, which coming to the ear of the said Earl, who rightly guessed the ambitious Drift of his Lieut. General, He caused a Charge and impeachment to be drawn up against him for some misdemeanors in the Army as stirring up of mutiny, &c. and delivered it to the Lords, to whose Bar Cromw. was summoned, but he refused their Jurisdiction, pleading his priviledg as a Member of the House of Commons, who alone had Cognizance of him: and to be even with the E. recriminated him in the same manner to the House of Commons, but both these accusations stuck upon the file without any prosecution on either side, either party as yet afraid of the other, and distrustful of their plots, not having yet attained the absolute power from the King, which was the only Subject of the Quarrel. So soon did these Twins of the Usurpation struggle in the womb of their Ambition, and though Presbytery was midwifed first, yet Independency carried away the Blessing, or rather the Curse of their prosperous Violence.

not

For the Independents had insinuated such plausible Expedients for the redresse of this evil Manage of the Army, and by their austerer Piety (which Oliver most devoutly personated, being frequent in praying and preaching in his Quarters) had conciliated such an esteem of their Counsels, which were absolute Intrigues to the contrary Faction, that a Resolution was taken to module the Army, and appoint a new General; and in this Consultation great part of the Winter 1644. was taken up: the rest was spent in a seeming tendency to Peace, by a Treaty held at Uxbridge; which Affair concerned Cromwell no further than thus, that it shewed how eminent and great a man he was taken to be, being named in the Parliaments Demands and propositions, for one of the standing Commissioners, to whose trust and exercise the Militia of the Kingdom (upon agreement) should be committed.

While these and the like Articles were in vain debating, the prosecution of the War was effectually intended; and the new module so far advanced, that an Ordinance passed the two Houses, wherein it was forbidden any Member of either House to have any command in the Army or Garrisons: and the time limited to forty dayes from the publishing the said Ordinance. By this fair and impartial dealing (as they called it) the Earl of Essex, Manchester, Stamford, and Denbigh; Sir William Waller, Sir Philip Stapleton, and others were laid aside, only Lieutenant General Cromwell was respited for a while longer, because of his present usefulness in that unsettled Condition of the Army, and because he had been of an unexampled success and Conduct. In the place of Essex, Sir Thomas Fairfax was made General: and he issued out Commissions to such whom the Independents favoured, most of the Supreme Officers being discarded, and entituled the Reformadoes, and left a begging their pay, and their Inferiour ones substituted in their places. Among the rest of these new blades, Ireton was raised to be Commissary General of the Horse, Cromwell's second, who had newly married one of his Daughters, and was as near in brain to him as in blood.

This continuance of Cromwel in his Command after all the other Members of Parliament were laid aside, at last upon the marching of the Army in the beginning of the Year 1645. styled him Lieutenant General; a little before which he had doctinated his Regiment in the new mode of Addreses to the Parliament, and to the General, setting forth their acquiescences and gladness in this frame and module of the Army, and that they were ready to lay down their lives in prosecution of the good Cause so far advanced. And this Arche-type was soon after followed by every Regiment and Garrison, whereunto none but the Creatures and Confidants of Independency were now admitted.

For from the first Head-quarter; of this Army, Cromwel (having newly come out of the West, and tendred his Service to the General, if the Parliament should think fit, but intimating his sorrow that he fear'd he should not have the honour to wait upon him (when at the very instant came down another dispensation) was sent with a flying party of Horse (by his party's prevalency in the House for forty daies longer) to intercept a Convoy of Horse which was the Queens Regiment, the Earl of Northampton's, and Colonel Palmer's, with some other Troops coming to Oxf. to bring off the King with his Train of Artillery; who made such hast, that at Islip Bridge he surprized and routed them, took four hundred Horse and two hundred Prisoners, with the Queens Standard, and continuing his good speed, having got intelligence of a party of three hundred and fifty Foot under Sir William Vaughan, who were marching toward Ratcod-Bridge, he pursued them and took the said Sir William, Lieutenant Colonel Littleton, and two hundred more Prisoners, and immediately summoned Blechingdon House not far distant from the place, whither some Ladies were newly come to give a visit to Col. Windebank's (the Governour's) Bride, who being affrighted with the suddenness of the danger, never left importuning the unfortunate Gentleman till he rendered the Garrison; though Cromwel, for want of Foot, could never have forced him out, making use of this Stratagem by raising a Cry of, Fall on Foot, fall on: for this surrender, upon his coming to Oxford, by Sentence of a Council of War he was shot to death, leaving his Widow to blast with her sighs and tears, Cromwel's Laurels, who with this envious Triumph returned to his General. And this first happy Exploit, done by him in the beginning of the Expedition, was taken and published for a good Omen of his future Service; and therefore the Prudence of the Parliament was much commended in continuing him in Command, who was so hopeful an Instrument of carrying on the remaining work through so many difficulties, which had so long, and yet seemed so insuperably to impede it. Thus did his Faction and Partisans prepare and sublime him to his succeeding Enterprises and Designs after the expiration of the War.

To enhance this reputation and to secure his continuance in the Army, he next resolved upon a gallanter, and more hazardous Attempt, the reducing of Faringdon house, which had been an impregnable and most advantageous Garrison for the King; the Governour, was Sir George Lyffe, a person of an invincible Spirit, and eminent throughout the War; To the better effect of this Design, he borrowed rowed 600 foot of M. G. Brown from Abington, and with them fell presently to storming, but was notably repulsed, losing 50. men, without any successe at all; and before he could get off was attacked by a party of General Goring's Horse, commanded by himself then newly come out of the West from Taunton Siege, who, being as vigilant and valourous a Commander as himself, gave Cromwel the first brush he received in the war, taking three Colours and Major Bethel prisoner, and so returned to his former Leagure at Taunton.

In the meanwhile General Fairfax by Order of the Committee of both Kingdoms of England and Scotland, who ordered the Conduct of the War, was advancing into the West for the relief of the said Town of Taunton, and, because the King was yet at Oxford preparing to take the Field, Cromwel was left behind in the same parts, where now he quartered with Major General Brown to attend the Kings motion, and to impede his Conjunctions with the Princes Rupert and Maurice, then coming with a Complete Body of Horse out of Worcestershire; but his Majesty had equipped so gallant an Army, that Cromwel durst not venture to fight him or retard his march any whither, so that Fairfax was presently recalled and ordered to sit down before Oxford, to reduce the King to the care of that place, and upon advantages to fight him: when News came that the King, having joyned with the Princes, and relieved Chester beleiged by Sir Will. Brereton, was now returning and bending his March towards the Associate Counties, the heart and untouch'd strength of the Parliament Cause, and therefore Cromwel was immediately dispatch'd into the Isle of Ely, with three Troops to secure that against any Invasion, it being as the bulwark or Fortress of the rest. But the King diverting from that course, came and sat down before Leicester, and after summons stormed and took it. Which put the Parliament into such a fright, that they commanded Fairfax to rise from Oxford, and presently find out the King and fight him, who was now (as he himself writ to the Queen) in a better and more successful condition than any time since the War. This Order Fairfax (having never sent in a summons to the City, as forejudging he should rise without it disgracefully) readily obeyed, but withal requested them that they would forthwith dispatch away Cromwel from the Isle of Ely, to command the Horse, extolling his Experience and Success in that Service.
the

Accordingly Cromwel reinforced and recruited with 600. Horse, of the Association, returned to the Army then marching to Northampton: where the General was informed that the King lay about Daventry, quartering his Foot and Carriages upon Borough-hill, as if he intended to fight upon that ground if they should advance. But he stayed till the 1200. Horse, which he had sent to carry the Cattle he had taken out of Leicester and Northampton-shire, for the supply of Oxford, were returned, intending thence according to advice of his Council of War, to march to the relief of Pomfret Castle in the North, and to reduce those parts lost to him ever since Marston Moor, and so to draw on Fairfax after him, and fight him at advantage: which he could not do in these Counties, that were every where Garrison'd by the Parliament forces.

But

But this Resolution, the quicker Consultation and Opinion of Cromwel soon disappointed; for by his advice (now that their Army could expect no other Additions but Coll. Rossiter, who was then also in a Dayes march of them, for Sir John Gell was joyned already) Ireton was presently dispatch'd with a Brigade of Horse to observe the posture of the Kings Army; and if they were upon their March Northwards, to skirmish them in the Rear, and keep them in Action till the whole body could come up and engage. June the 13. Fairfax came to Gilsborough, within five miles of Borough-hill, whence the Cavaliers, the 1200. Horse being returned, were marching northwards: and the next night to the wonder and amazement of the King, Ireton gave an Alarum to His quarters at Naseby, whence about 11. of the Clock the King dislodged and hastned to Harborough, where Prince Rupert and the Van of the Army was quartered, here a Council of War was presently convened, and by the Kings fatal Opinion concluded, that because there was danger of bringing off the Rear of his Army, the Enemy pressing so near and hard upon them, that therefore they should desist from their March farther Northward, and immediately turn back upon the Enemy, and give him Battle, relying chiefly upon the valor of the Infantry, now flusht & encouraged with the Plunder and Spoil of Leicester.

This was put in Execution (though the Major voices were for staying till General Goring with his forces were come up) and the Kings will obeyed. For very early in the morning the Scouts brought word, that the King was making all hast to the Engagement, being falsly informed that Fairfax in fear

was retreating to Northampton, whereas he had now disposed of Naseby field, and awaited Him, having Cromwel with Whalley on his right wing, and Ireton on his left, the one opposed to my Lord Langdale, and the Northern Horse, and the other to Prince Rupert General of the Cavalry, the King himself being Generalissimo. To come to the Event, Prince Rupert totally routed Ireton, who, being engaged and driven upon the Kings rightmost Foot, was there wounded in the Thigh with a Halbert, and taken Prisoner, and the Field on that hand cleared; which Fairfax and Cromwel observing, having not yet stirred from their ground, Fairfax with a short Speech encouraged the Troops to the Charge; which was seconded with some devout ejaculations from Cromwel, who clapping Spurs to his Horse fell in with Langdale's Brigade, and quite charged through three bodies and utterly broke them; nor did he stop till with fine force he had likewise beat that wing from their ground, without possibility of rallying or recovering it again. In this Action a Commander of the Kings knowing Cromwel, advanced smartly from the Head of his Troops to exchange a Bullet singly with him, and was with the like gallantry encountred by him, both sides forbearing to come in, till their pistols being discharged. the Cavalier with a slanting Back-blow of a broad-Sword, luckily cut the Ribbond that tied his *Murri-*on, and with a draw threw it off his head, and now ready to repeat his stroke, his party came in and rescued him, and one of them alighting, threw up his head-piece into his saddle, which Oli. hastily catching, as being affrighted with the chance, clapt it the wrong way on his head, and so fought with it the rest of

of the Day, which proved most highly fortunate on his side, (though the King most magnanimously and expertly managed the fight, exposing himself to the eminentest perils of the Field) and raised him beyond the Arts and reach of Envy or his Enemies of the Presbyterian party, who had so long been heaving at him to oust him of all Military employment, which concluding so pertinently and pre-emptorily for him in this grand Event, did charm the hatred malice and prejudice against him into fear and dread what this arrogance of his fortune would finally aspire to.

This Battel wholly overthrew the King, who was never after able to make Head against the Parliament forces, but piece-meal lost his Armies, Castles and Towns; Fairfax taking in the remoter Western Garrisons, while Cromwel was employed nearer to London, being sure to have one eye to the Counsels of the Parliament, as well as the other intent against the King. Among the rest of those places taken by him, as Winchester, the Devises and Langford-House; Basing-House, that had defeated so many Sieges, and ruined so many Leagues, was not able to withstand the Fortune of this Victor, but humbled it self to dust and ruine at his first and terrible approach.

The War now almost expired, he began to ruminate on his former Dreams, and to adjust those strange revolutions and unexpected alterations of the Times and the Government to his former Fancy, in which he had so much affiance anew, that he became resolutely confirmed, that all those things were brought about meerly to fulfill that Oracle of his Imagination, That he should be King. And there-therefore he thought it a just reverence to his Fate to neglect no advantages, occasions, and means which might conduce to the accomplishment of its mysterie and conciliate its constant affection and favour to him. One thing primarily requisite, was the assistance of some confident Privado, and to this purpose he had before pitch'd upon Col. Ireton, a man of a most profound and deep dissimulation, and of a most clean conveyance of any mischievous design, one very well learned, but who had converted it (as Toads do the best nutriment unto the most exquisite poyson) to barbarous and most Horrid Artifices of Impiety and Treason; this man, Cromwel made sure to him, first by marriage, as aforesaid, and now by a more mutual endearment, the partnership of the Sovereignty, which they agreed to seize: and from henceforth they never ceased plotting and conspiring, now colloquing with this party, then with that, and fomenting divisions still betwixt all, till with those many strange patches of Policy, Cromwel made himself a Protectoral Robe, with which he was not many years after solemnly vested.

In the mean time the King in Oxford fearing a Siege, and having no better shelter in England to secure himself, after he had in vain wooed the Parliament from this his Court to a Treaty and Agreement, designed an escape out of their hands; and to that purpose (Colonel Rainsborough and other Forces at a distance lying about all the passes of the City) by Colonel Ashburnham's means procured a passe from the General for the said Col. Ashburnham and his two Servants to travel from Oxford upon some pretence of private business of the Col-

Colonels, and by vertue thereof in a Disguise of a Servant passed their Guards, and after many traverses delivered himself into the Scotch hands, then besieging Newark. Herein Cromwel most cunningly and deceitfully first practised the Kings ruine: For whereas upon the rendition of that City, if the King had been taken in it, a sudden end had been put to the Troubles by some composure, which would have marr'd Cromwel's Plots, not to be acted but by a Stratocracy and an Army; by this means of suffering Him to escape, which might easily have been prevented, the War was no nearer a conclusion than at the beginning, if the, Scots as was hoped howsoever, would have proved honest, and kept their Allegiance and Faith due to such extraordinary confidence and trust reposed in them.

Now to carry on their Treason the more irresistibly and discoverably, upon a plausible pretence of lessening the charge of the Kingdom, they concluded to put their Partisans in the Parliament (who gaped for the spoil of the Kingdom, and would be content with that) to motion a disbanding of some Regiments of the Army; which, being a just and necessary work, was assented to by many Patriots, who understood not the drift of the Conspiracy. And accordingly Major General *Masse*y, and Colonel Cook and their Brigades were ordered to disband, amounting to Two thousand five Hundred Horse: which journey-work was put upon General Fairfax, who at the Devises performed it, giving them six Weeks pay for many Months Arrears. Divers of the disbanded came from very remote countries, and had passes, some for Mesopotomia, some for Egypt, and Ethiopia, a sanctified and pious Crew.

Major

Egypt, and Ethiopia, a sanctified and pious Crew. Major Gen. Massey was he whom they aimed at in this Dismission, as too much an Essexian, and of juster and honester principles than their designs would allow, of a very great interest in the Army also, and very well esteemed and beloved by them, as being of a clear spirit, and as valorous as the best of them, and would dare to oppose any rebellious practice whatsoever against the Authority of their Masters. Besides this Cromwel had a further reach to the future on the Parliament likewise, first to make a Division and beget and stir some ill humour in the Army, as if that were the leading case; next to make those Officers that should continue, when they should perceive at whose beck they must stand or fall, more fixedly dependent on him, and then to instil unto them his own traitorous designs and purposes: and so, having the Army entire at his devotion, effect and bring to pass all his Royal projections. Massey submitted, but carried the revenges of this affront and Cabal with him to the Parliament House. Cromwel upon the Kings rendring himself to the Scots at Newark, was at Westminster, and perceived by the toils and perplexity the Parliament was in about the Kings Person, that it was a brave thing to be a Monarch, and therefore concluded it very necessary to other his Elements and Points of Policy to get possession of His Majesty; and thereupon his party, the Independent Faction, being so instructed, fell violently upon the Scots and would have run it up to little less than Treason for the Scots to detain the King. To this purpose divers Resolutions and Messages passed, but it appearing in the Conclusion that the Scots drove at a Bargain

Bargain, Cromwel and his Faction most readily agreed to strike it, and so the King was delivered to the English Commissioners at Newcastle.

Yet that nothing might slip or pass which any way promoted his ambitious purposes, he made use of this agreement of the 200000 l. to be paid the Scots by his Agents to mutiny the Army under General Poyntz, another Presbyterian Commander then at York, upon their Guard against the said Scots, as if the Parliament had no care or respect for them; but that Forreigners shou'd be paid with their money; and then afterwards upon the ceasing that Tumult and Military Sedition, to get Poyntz dismissed, as too remisse and negligent in his Command. And not long after died the Earl of Essex, one whom Oliver more feared than any or all the Presbyterian Officers together, Death officiously removing this great impediment also; so that by this time there was not an Officer left in the Army, that did not acknowledge Cromwel's Sultanship; the Gen. himself being lulled and bewitched with the Syren Charms of his zealous insinuations.

The Presbyterian Party in the Parliament began now to be sensible, whither these devices tended, and therefore, to Co-interplot this Cabal of Cromwel's, they resolved upon a new disbanding of some (the Scots having friendly departed home) and transporting of other Regiments for the service of Ireland, for that the necessity of that Kingdome did require the Translation of the War thither: This the Independents presently perceived, and gave Cromwel timely notice of, who knowing himself to be principally aimed at, caused it by some of his Familiars to be spread about the Souldiery, that the Parliament by the Major Vote of some corrupt Members, had voted the disbanding of the Army, to cheat them of their Arrears, and to send them in a necessitous condition into Ireland, to be there knock'd on the head by the Rebels. This presently put the Common Soldiers into such a rage, who alwaies judge by the first appearance, that they flew out into most opprobrious and reviling Language against the Parliament; but Fury being no present remedy to this evil, Ireton and his instructed Pupils prescribe a Module (never heard of or practised in War before) of a Military Common-Council, who should assemble two Commission Officers, and two private Soldiers out of every Regiment, to Consult for the good of the Army, to draw up their grievances and present them to the General, and he to the Parliament; these to be called by the Name of Adjudicators.

Having thus made sure of the Army, he thought it time now to make sure of the King, whom the Parliaments Commissioners had brought to his Captivity at Holmby-house, and therefore Ireton and he having sometime before acquainted themselves with the King in this his restraint, and vowed and protested their readiness to serve him, to the ensnaring the Kings belief, while they condoled the hard and unreasonable carriage of the Parliament towards him, especially in point of Liberty of Conscience, and the Worship of God (His Majesties Chaplains having been obstinately refused him) they judged it no difficult thing to get his Person into their Custody and deceive his good nature, with the same semblances of it in themselves, only the manner was not presently resolved by them. For without the Generals consent and Command it could not be done in his name; nor might it avowedly be done by the Council of War: for it would be a peremptory and hazardous enterprize, and engage the whole Kingdome about their Ears. But at last it was concluded betwixt them that this Surprizal of the King should be fathered on the Council of Adjutators, as the sense and A&T of the Army. Thus in all these pushes and puzzles of accidents did they extricate themselves by that Mungril Consistory, a meer Chimera or Brainfick Idea of a Convention which was conversant only about shadows and umbrages of things, while Cromwel ran away with the substance.
the

This way being agreed upon, one Cornet Joyce a busie pragmatiscal person, whom Cromwel his Familiar had tutored in the Method of Boldnesse and Rebellion, was privately conferred with about it, and after some familiar compellations lugged into the Conspiracy, and immediately dispatched away with a party of 1000 Horse on the 4. of June, to Holmby: where he arrived late at Night, but being very importunate to speak with the King, was by his order admitted, to whom he declared his Errand; and being demanded by whose Authority, whether by the General, or Council of War? No other answer could be drawn from him, but that it was from the Army, adding that if the King should refuse to go along with him he must carry him away per force.

The King neverthelesse deliberated the whole night, and consulted with the Parliaments Commissioners, what was most adviseable for him to do, though the sway of his judgment invited him to the Army Custody (from a just Resentment of the sullennels and Rebellious obstinacy of the Parliament) who had by Joyce offered him (as the last and chief Artifice of Cromwel to all sorts of ranks and persons) the liberty of Conscience, with other specious and dutiful pretenses.

From Holmbury therefore next morning the King was carried to Childesty; then the Head-quarters of the Army, though the King desired to go to Newmarket his own house, as perswading himself in some greater degree of Royalty, than in the Parliaments Tuition; but this was at first denyed and a complementary amends made him by the General, and more particularly by Cromwel, that His Majesty could no where be safer or more regally honoured
then in their Quarters, which were the only Sanctuary of his Person.

This daring presumption of seizing the King gave light to the World what this Oliver would at last appear, though no certain Conclusions could be made, what the mischief did presently signifie:
It was sufficient to Cromwel's design to amuse the World, and let them guesse at the danger he had readily prepared beyond any sudden remedy. And therefore he now personates the Kings Interest, professeth himself exceeding sorry to have mistaken the quarrel, intimates and insinuates to the King, that there were a corrupt party (meaning the Presbyterians) in Parliament, who alone withstood his Resolution, and that he and all the power and friends
he could make, were resolved to assert his Rights, and vindicate them from those unreasonable injuries
of the Juncto, as he spared not frequently to own the same honesty to the Kings friends, then admitted

ted to attend him; particularly he declared to Colonel John Cromwel (a Commander in the States Service in Holland) then in England, That he thought the King of England was the most injured Prince in the World; and clapping his hand to his Sword in some passion said, Cousin This shall right him: to the very great Contentment of that Loyal Subject, whom we shall have further occasion in this Discourse, and from this passage to mention.

In the mean while the King is at his earnest desire (which Cromwel seemed most officiously to study) conveyed to Newmarket House, and thither his friends and Chaplains without any restriction admitted, and such a sudden change made in the condition of the King, as to his Liberty and Honour, that most of his party were dazled with the shews of it, and could not foresee the Treason that was hid under those fair Vmbrages: Nor could the King himself (so cunningly Cromwel carryed it) give any true judgment of this his Surprizal, more than that the Examples and rules of all Policy generally resolved him, That the Person of a Prince, in whosoever hands it remaineth, addeth Strength and Authority to that Party.

The King being thus in Oliver's hands, as he had declared (upon Joyce's telling him, that he had the King in Custody) that he had the Parliament then in his Pocket; so his next main Work was to perform his word; and to this intent he never ceased exasperating the King against the Presbyterian Members in Parliament, thereby indisposing the King to any accommodation with them, though the Terms or Propositions sent His Majesty were so unreasonable that they needed no dissuasion to his Assent: but this Ambodexter so invisibly managed both the injustice of the Juncto, and the indignation and resentment of the King, that he was looked upon no otherwise then but at most as a kind Spectator and Well-wisher to the Kings Fortunes.

Nay so far had he proceeded in this Diffimulation and Treachery (the more detestable, by how much the simple confidence of so innocent a Prince was abused and deceived) that he stuck not sundry times voluntarily and of his own accord to assure the King that if the Parliament failed in their duty, and did not speedily restore him, and settle the Kingdom, the Army should do it without them, and that to that very purpose the newly constituted Council or Court of Adjutors were now proceeding, and that speedily his Majesty should see the effect of his Faithfulness and Allegiance, while he the more indiscernibly sought, and most nefariously practised his Ruine.

The Presbyterians in Parliament, were hastily alarm'd at these Transactions of Cromwel; and therefore (the Army having assumed to themselves by decree of this their Court of Adjutors, a right of Petitioning as English Freemen, as being no mercenary Soldiers) resolved as was partly hinted before, to divide the Army and send part of it to Ireland, and forthwith to Cashiere Cromwel and his Chief Partizans, and to run parallel with his designs, to send Propositions to the King, at the same time as the Army had hammered out some proposals of more equal and of fairer pretences then theirs, so that the King acknowledged the juster dealing of the Army: with which satisfaction of the King, Cromwel seemed very much delighted, assuring ing His Majesty that more than that now proposed (which yet plainly asserted the Regal and Monarchical right) should in time be brought about, and that he might be confident in him as his most Dutiful and faithful Subject.

Thus practised he with the King by Delusion and Treachery, but against the Parliament he proceeded in a more forcible way: for his party therein had tryed all wayes to overreach the Presbyterian with fineness and Artifice, but found them so vigilant and sensible of their proceedings, and being also far the Major part of the House, that no issue was to be expected from debates and disputes with them. For a Declaration was now published, forbidding the Soldiers to Petition the Parliament, as being under their pay and command, and for disobedience hereunto, Sir Philip Stapleton, and Mr. now L. Hollis had drawn their Swords upon one Major Tuleday, and committed another one Nicholas Tew to Newgate, in the Month of May, and a private resolution had been taken to secure Cromwel then in Town, and not suffer him to return to the Army now full of rebellious mutiny against them; which might have put an end to this grand conspiracy, and the mischiefs ensuing: but Oliver having sudden intimation of the design, got secretly and hastily out of Town, and upon a Flea-bitten Nag without stop or stay arrived at the Rendezvouz at Triplo-Heath, June 5. his Horse all in a foam, and there was welcomed with the Shouts of the whole Army, to whom he declared the Actions and Designs of the Parliament.

And here was made that pernicious and destructive engagement of perpetuating the Army till their desires, that is, till Cromwel's devices should be attained : and this for the better Security he caused to be confirmed at another more general Rendezvous, June the 14 at New-market ; where He himself was the first man alighting from his Horse at the head of his Regiment and lying upon his Belly that subscribed it, which was in several Parchment Rolls universally followed. I must not omit one further remarque, on this occasion, one Edward, afterwards better known by the name of Colonel Saxby, and one Lazingby, both of the Council of Adjutors, were ordered by the said Council to attend the Lieutenant General Cromwel, then quartering near Colchester in Essex, with a draught of the Engagement, every word whereof was privily dictated by himself and Ireton; yet at the receipt hereof Cromwel very angrily rising up in his bed, demanded, how they durst presume to give him any Papers ? they replied, It was the sense of the Army, and that they were commanded to deliver it. Be you well assured of that, saith he in the same rage ; and presently thereupon read it, and instantly changing his countenance to a mild and devout Aspect, said, It is a most just thing, God prosper it, I will stand by the Army with it to the utmost of my life and Fortunes ; and so, after many familiar Caresses dismissed them ; it being his constant custome afterwards during this Intrigue, to take the meanest Soldier by the hand, clap him on the shoulder, or box him lightly on the Ear, thereby to ingratiate himself into their favour : and it accordingly succeeded in this bold attempt and enterprize upon the Parliament.

For immediately hereupon an Impeachment is drawn up and presented to, and approved by, this Council

Council of Adjutors against 11. Members of the House of Commons, the chief of the Presbyterian party, who had threatned and acted opposition to his Designs, viz. Sir William Waller, Col. Massey, Sir John Clotworthy, Mr. Denzil Hollis, Col. Long, Mr. Anthony Nichols, Sir Philip Stapleton, Mr. Glyn, Sir John Maynard, Sir Williams Lewis, and Col. Edward Harley; the main of which charge was, that they had been the Obstruēters and Prejudicers of several Petitions to the Parliament for redresse of publique grievances, retarded the settlement of the Kingdome, and had shared the Revenue thereof among themselves, and last of all had underhand complied with the King---Imputations of all sorts to make something stick, and to catch one parties or others belief of their criminal Suggestions.

This was accordingly with impudence enough presented to the House of Commons by Colonel Scroop, Okey, Hemson, and Pride, Leut. Col. Goffe, Major Disborough, Berry, Clark, Carter; Rolph, and Sexby; to which Charge a Paper was added, wherein they set forth, that, in pursuance of those Representatives, they had the Heads of the charge ready, and will appoint fit persons on their and the Kingdoms behalf to make it good: They demanded Money likewise and Arrears, and to be paid equally, with such who, being cajoled by the eleven Members, had engaged for Ireland, which forces they require to be stoppt from returning toward London, for fear of a design. And though the Parliament had expressly declared against this unparallel'd violence, yet straightwaies the Army advanced neerer to London, resolving not to desist their March till they were superseded the House; which affront was most abjectly suffered by the Parliament, and the said Members after some frivolous debates, suspended sitting till they had cleared themselves: and now Cromwel (having thus awed the Parliament, and abused the King) was come to a fair prospect of his aspired greatness, making good that presagious saying of his upon the seizing of the King by Joyce: there remained now nothing to hinder the facilitating of the residue of his Plot but the City of London: and we shall see him cajole and baffle them worse and more insolently than the Parliament.

was

But before we mention that, we must return to the King, now traversing the Country with his Army, and shewed to the people in great state, and received and welcomed every where by them with all demonstrations of joyful Allegiance, and in like manner yet complemented by Cromwel: Thus he progressed from New-market to Roxffon, thence by St. Albans to Hatfield, to Windsor (being carried towards London almost in the same Road, in which he was driven thence) to Caversham, back again to Maidenhead, to Latimer, Stoke, Oatlands, Sion-House, almost in view and hearing of those Tumults which forced him away; while in the interim, Oliver having made a Pique against the Citizens, and revenged one Tumult by another, had made the City submit, and receive the Domineering Army in Triumph through their Streets, with Lawrel and other Ensigns of Victory in their Hats.

With the Army returned those Fugitive Members that left the Parliament upon the same Tumults being invited by Cromwel to his Sanctuary of Red-Coats, while the remaining Members had voted the Kings present coming to London, to treat personally nally with his two Houses ; all which Votes being tumultuously obtained (by instinct of some of Cromwel's own sending to increase the violence) were afterwards vacated after a long struggling in the Parliament as contrary to Priviledge ; and the secluded Members, who had resumed their seats , deserted London, and went some over Sea, others with passes to their own homes in the Country , resigning their ill employed power to Cromwel , and his Faction in the Parliament ; who abused it ten times more. In Justification of this insolence they published a Declaration, wherein they said that the Parliament had declared that it is no resistance of Magistracy to side with just Principles, and the Law of Nature and Nations, being the same Law upon which they had assisted them, and that the Soldiers may lawfully hold the hands of the General who will turn his Cannon upon the Army on purpose to destroy them ; The Seamen the hands of the Pilot who wilfully runs the Ship upon a Rock, as their Brethren the Scotchmen had also argued.

The said Declaration still directing them to the equitable sense of all Laws and Constitutions , as dispensing with the very Letter of the same, and being supreme to it , when the safety and preservation of all is concerned, and assured them ; That all Authority is fundamentally seated in the Office, and but ministerially in the persons.

But before this great success , the dubious Expectation thereof had caused Cromwel to stagger now and then at his first resolutions, (which if prosperous would at all times help themselves, and there ultimately he was fixed, whatever conditions and promises cross accidents should extort from him)

him) and therefore he was dealing with the King in way of recompense and reward for his Service in his restitution, that he should be made Earl of Essex, and a Knight of the Garter, his eldest Son to be of the Bed-chamber to the Prince, his Son in Law Ireton, to be either Lord Deputy, or at least Field Marshall General of Ireland. And it was reported by Henry Cromwel, that then Commanded the Generals Lifeguard, that the King had put himself upon his Father and Brother Ireton, to make his terms for him, and restore him to his Crown: Which grant of the Kings caused and produced those Proposals before-mentioned to be contrived, but now in the very nick of this Juncture, set forth and published, called the proposals for the settling a just and lawful peace, where in the three first and last particulars, the Authority was left as entire in the King as before the rest were some Caprichio's of Biennial Parliaments and the like Figaries, whose impertinencies discredited the important veracity of the other. But this feud, betwixt the Presbyterians and Cromwel, ending so fortunately for him, there being nothing at present to withstand his first and grand intendment, he began to wave his respects to the King, and cast of those disguises wherewith he had made himself acceptable to the Kings adherents, and laid aside the King and them.

The King therefore gently reminds Cromwel of his promises, repeats to him his Protestations, and urgeth the Proposals aforesaid (and not only so, but, in confidence of the fair meaning of the Army, declines a speedier accommodation with the Parliament) but Cromwel begins to turn a deaf ear, to deny many things what he said and promised, to retract tract from others, pretending the difference of times and circumstances, that they cannot be performed; telling the King moreover, that he did mistake and not rightly understand his meaning; and in short, that though he would keep his word with his Majesty, now it was not in his power, for that the Adjutors were grown to such an ungoverned and insolent licentiousness, that untill the Discipline of the Army could be recover'd, it were in vain to expect any such thing as he, when he promised really intended.

The King was at this time at Hampton-Court, perplexed on the one hand with the obstinacy of the Parliament in their Propositions, being more rigid since the last garbling by the Army; and on the other with the dangerous positions of the Adjutors and the Levelling party both in Camp and City, in which last John Lilburn was Chief of the Faction, who decry'd Monarchy and all former rights of Government, having something (which Ireton spread by the by as it were among the Souldiery) in projection on purpose to stave off all manner and means of settlement. This at last came to a System or Consistency, and was stiled an Agreement of the people, and was now the only darling of the Army and the Sectaries; being a mixture or miscellany of politique Notions no way practicable among English men, being a deformation or destruction of all things, but an establishment of nothing, a meer temporary expedient and shift of design, (except alwayes their Arrears. Indemnity and the period to the Parliament) and this shape Cromwel assumes also, confessing and acknowledging the excellence, equity, and goodness of the same, the only fault in it was the unseasonableness ; for as yet it was not his time and his Cue to appear so publicly against the King, and this his character of it was drest out & enlarged with such taking Saint-like Language, as the Phana-tick rabble might best be surprized, and not suspect any of his own venomous designs to be lurking under the leaf of his holy and sacred pretences. Withal when his Plot against the King was ripe for Execution, he caused a Fast to be published in the Army, (a certain forerunner of mischief with him) where he was as usually observed to howl and cry, and bedew his Cheeks with the Tears of Hypocrisie, Cruelty, and Decit; and after this Mock-duty performed, he and the rest of the Officers pretended to confess their iniquity and abomination, in declining the Cause of the People, and tampering with the King, and then in the presence of the All-seeing God, acknowledge the way of an Agreement of the People to be the way to Peace and Freedom.
the

The King was in the mean while, by the fallacious advice of Whalley, and the practices of Cromwell, (who had caused frequent rumors to be whispered, of some Assassinate intended by the Levellers against his person) frightened from Hampton-Court, which place was found to be too near to London for fear of a rescue, in a dark and tempestuous night, in Nov. 1647. an hour or two before which Cromwell then at Hampton Court, cast himself upon his knees, and often kissing the Kings Hand, said, So God bless me and mine as I endeavour yours, and your Childrens rights and dignities; and turning to Mr. Huntingdon who from this passage could never afterwards endure Cromwell, but interrupted him) said, Tarry you with the King this night, and if any thing happen here, here, bring me word; who accordingly did so with some grief and amazement, to which Cromwel replied with laughter, that the King was where he desired, and that there wanted nothing now to his desires, but that his Children were there to bear him Company, under the disloyal custody of Col. Hammond, Governour of the Isle of Wight, and Brother to the most Learned and Reverend Dr. Hammond, which consideration, Cromwel forelaid, would invite the King in his distress to betake himself thither, where we shall leave him in a most disconsolate Imprisonment. The Votes of Non-Addresses being not long after procured by Cromwel's Menaces to the Parliament, when upon the Debate of them he declared in such like words; That it was now expected by the good People of the Nation and the Army, that the Parliament would come to some Resolution and Settlement, as the Price of all the Blood and Treasure that had been expended in the War; and that they would not now leave them to the expectation of any good from a Man, whose heart God had hardened; but if they did, they should be forced to look for their preservation some other way.

At the end of this Speech he laid his hand upon his Sword by his side, as was the more observed, because formerly in the same place it could not keep him from trembling, when Sir Philip Stapleton a man of spirit and metal baffled him; but Sir Philip and his Seconds were now out of Doors. Next to him spoke Ireton, in the very same sense (being newly chosen a recruit for the Parliament, by the illegal Writ of Election) extolling and magnifying the valour, civility, and duty of the Army, concluding with the same threats, that if the Parliament would not settle the Kingdome without the King, then they of necessity must and would.

So

So that after some Opposition, the said vote having passed against any further Address to be made to the King, Oliver thought himself cock-sure, and therefore the King, Parliament, and City being in his power, he had no rub left to his Ambition, but those Imps and Spirits of his own railing and conjuring up the Adjutors and Levellers of the Army, who having con'd their Lesson of the Agreement with the people, were become most artful and skilfull Governours, already boasting in the Countrey, (many of which silly people they had induced to their side upon the account of laying all in common, and in a wild Parity) that the Parliament sate only during their pleasure, and till a new Representative (then forming) should take upon them the Government: nor did they more dutifully respect, and behave themselves to their Officers, whom they counted as pieces of the prerogative Military, and therefore decry'd all Courts and Council, of them, which now began to separate and act by themselves, without the mixture of these Adjutors.

This exorbitancy and height of the Soldiery was altogether as destructive to Cromwel, now he had done his work with them for this time, as any of the other three Interests: but desperate Diseases must have desperate Cures, for immediately the Headquarters being then at Wara, Colonel Eyer a Leveller was seised and imprisoned, and one Arnold a private Souldier shot to death for promoting the former solemn Engagewent, and Agreement of the people, and after that, he cashiered all such who favoured the same: and to fan and cull out the rest, he proceeded to disband 20 out of a Troop, by which the most of that Party were totally excluded; the like

was done in London by the Imprisonment of Mr. Prince, and others of the same Faction.

Having thus for the present still'd that commotion in the Army, the danger of a second War seemed afresh to threaten the Juncto and Cromwel, by reason of their injurious Votes of Non-Address; and therefore to prevent so formidable a Conjunction of all Interests and Parties against him, he now by his Party and Emissaries proposeth an accomodation between the Presbyterians and Independents, and a way and means whereby they may be so united; at the motion of this in the House of Commons, a Gentleman replied, That if there were any such persons, who had any private Interest different from the publick, and under the distinction of parties had prejudiced the Kingdome, he was not fit to be a Member of that House: Nevertheless it was insisted on that the House would declare and ratifie their Votes of nulling and making void the Votes that passed in the absence of the Speakers that fled into the Army in 1647, & their Engagement of adhering to the Army, which were tacitly confessed to be then unduly procured; so fearful and doubtful was he again of the issue of those new Troubles he foresaw would fall out, and therefore would shelter himself and justify his Actions by the Authority he had so often baffled.

The same Artifices he used likewise to the City, offering them now upon the like condition of uniting Interests, the freedom of their Lord Mayor and Aldermen, viz. Sir John Gayr, Alderman Langham, Alderman Adams, and others, and the setting up again their Posts and Chains; but when they (having already treated and engaged with the Scots, then in preparation for a March into England) refused to Give ear to any Propositions or terms, resenting the base affronts he and the Army had put upon them. He questioned his Agent Glover, who gave him Commission to make any such Overtures? and in great rage turned him out of his Service.

About the same time to be in preparation and readinesse against any City tumultuary onslaught or deliberate Massacre, he had several Magazines furnished in private Houses in London, to Arm his Phana-tick partakers, one of which being found out was out-noised by him to be the store of the Malignant and Presbyterian Party, and the Arms accordingly secured and closely delivered into his hands again; which was consonant to his former Cheats, when upon the disband of the Supernumeraries, their Arms were delivered to his disposal, and others more ad-dicted to his Party Listed and Armed with them in other Regiments, so that the charge to the publick was still the same.

The danger still increasing, he suffered the Lords as namely the Earls of Suffolk, Lincoln, Lord Maynard, Willoughby, &c. whom he had impeached of High Treason after his March into London, to be freed from their Imprisonment in the Tower, and with them the Maior and Aldermen aforesaid. And as a further satisfaction and submission to the Authority of the Parliament, A Declaration of the Army is published, wherein they bewail their former miscarriages and misdemeanors towards the Parliament, their meddling with the Civil power, and that force and violence they had offered to the two Houses, and in conclusion promise faithfully and dutifully to acquiesce in their Resolutions and Wisdoms. With this Hocus Pa-cus deluding the Presbyterian party into a kind of stu-pid

pid neutrality or rather worse, while yet they would by no means comply with the King, until Polyphemus Courtelie appeared in this Cromwellian Craft.

The Scots under Duke Hamilton; having entered England, and divers Insurrections happening in England and Wales, according as was expected, Cromwel was ordered by the Parliament to attend the first of them, which was the Welsh and Northern Armies (though the Scots delayed their March so long till all was neer lost in England) and after a short Siege, upon the Defeat at St. Fagons, which was atchieved in his absence, took in Tenby-Castle; Pembroke-Castle held out against him a while longer, but, his hast indulging them good terms, was yielded; thence he marched for Lancashire, having joyn'd with Major General Lambert, who attended the motion of the Scotch Army; and at Preston, his forces amounting to few more than 9000 Men, whereas the Scots were no less than 20000, gave Duke Hamilton Battle, and after a very short dispute, wherein the English Force under Sir Marmaduke Langdale made him the greatest Opposition, totally routed the Scotch Army, taking all their Artillery, Bag and Baggage and some 9000 prisoners, with the Duke himself in the pursuit Southwards; while he followed the main of the flying Army Northwards, with a resolution of putting a final end to that bulinesse, and to rid himself of the Fears which from thence had hitherto perplexed him. Upon this his hasty advance, Major General Monro who commanded the reserve of 6000 Men to the former Army, and was marching after them, immediately returned to Berwick; and so back into Scotland: Berwick upon Cromwel's approach rendred it self upon terms, and hindered not his advance

So that after some Opposition, the said votes having passed against any further Address to be made to the King, Oliver thought himself cock-sure, and therefore the King, Parliament, and City being in his power, he had no rub left to his Ambition, but those Imps and Spirits of his own raising and conjuring up the Adjutors and Levellers of the Army, who having con'd their Lesson of the Agreement with the people, were become most artful and skilfull Governours, already boasting in the Countrey, (many of which silly people they had induced to their side upon the account of laying all in common, and in a wild Parity) that the Parliament sate only during their pleasure, and till a new Representative (then forming) should take upon them the Government; nor did they more dutifully respect, and behave themselves to their Officers, whom they counted as pieces of the prerogative Military, and therefore decried all Courts and Council, of them, which now began to separate and act by themselves, without the mixture of these Adjutors.

This exorbitancy and height of the Soldiery was altogether as destructive to Cromwel, now he had done his work with them for this time, as any of the other three Interests: but desperate Diseases must have desperate Cures, for immediately the Headquarters being then at Wara, Colonel Eyer a Leveller was seized and imprisoned, and one Arnold a private Souldier shot to death for promoting the former solemn Engagewent, and Agreement of the people, and after that, he cashiered all such who favoured the same: and to fan and cull out the rest, he proceeded to disband 20 out of a Troop, by which the most of that Party were totally excluded; the like

was done in London by the Imprisonment of Mr. Prince, and others of the same Faction.

Having thus for the present still'd that commotion in the Army, the danger of a second War seemed a-fresh to threaten the Juncto and Cromwel, by reason of their injurious Votes of Non-Address; and therefore to prevent so formidable a Conjunction of all Interests and Parties against him, he now by his Party and Emissaries proposeth an accomodation between the Presbyterians and Independents, and a way and means whereby they may be so united; at the motion of this in the House of Commons, a Gentleman replied, That if there were any such persons, who had any private Interest different from the publick, and under the distinction of parties had prejudiced the Kingdome, he was not fit to be a Member of that House: Nevertheless it was insisted on that the House would declare and ratifie their Votes of nulling and making void the Votes that passed in the absence of the Speakers that fled into the Army in 1647, & their Engagement of adhering to the Army, which were tacitly confessed to be then unduly procured; so fearful and doubtful was he again of the issue of those new Troubles he foresaw would fall out, and therefore would shelter himself and justify his Actions by the Authority he had so often baffled.

The same Artifices he uted likewise to the City, offering them now upon the like condition of uniting Interests, the freedom of their Lord Mayor and Aldermen, viz. Sir John Gayr, Alderman Langham, Alderman Adams, and others, and the setting up again their Posts and Chains; but when they (having already treated and engaged with the Scots, then in preparation for a March into England) refused to Give ear to any Propositions or terms, resenting the base affronts he and the Army had put upon them. He questioned his Agent Glover, who gave him Commission to make any such Overtures? and in great rage turned him out of his Service.

About the same time to be in preparation and readinesse against any City tumultuary onslought or deliberate Massacre, he had several Magazines furnished in private Houses in London, to Arm his Phana-tick partakers, one of which being found out was out-noised by him to be the store of the Malignant and Presbyterian Party, and the Arms accordingly secured and closely delivered into his hands again; which was consonant to his former Cheats, when upon the disband of the Supernumeraries, their Arms were delivered to his disposal, and others more addicted to his Party Listed and Armed with them in other Regiments, so that the charge to the publick was still the same.

The danger still increasing, he suffered the Lords as namely the Earls of Suffolk, Lincoln, Lord Maynard, Willoughby, &c. whom he had impeached of High Treason after his March into London, to be freed from their Imprisonment in the Tower, and with them the Maior and Aldermen aforesaid. And as a further satisfaction and submission to the Authority of the Parliament, A Declaration of the Army is published, wherein they bewail their former miscarriages and misdemeanors towards the Parliament, their meddling with the Civil power, and that force and violence they had offered to the two Houses, and in conclusion promise faithfully and dutifully to acquiesce in their Resolutions and Wisdom. With this Hocus Pocus deluding the Presbyterian party into a kind of stupor

pid neutrality or rather worse; while yet they would by no means comply with the King, until Polyphemus Courtelie appeared in this Cromwellian Craft.

The Scots under Duke Hamilton; having entered England, and divers Insurrections happening in England and Wales, according as was expected, Cromwel was ordered by the Parliament to attend the first of them, which was the Welsh and Northern Armies (though the Scots delayed their March so long till all was neer lost in England) and after a short Siege, upon the Defeat at St. Fagons, which was atchieved in his absence, took in Tenby-Castle; Pembroke-Castle held out against him a while longer, but, his hast indulging them good terms, was yielded; thence he marched for Lancashire, having joyn'd with Major General Lambert, who attended the motion of the Scotch Army; and at Preston, his forces amounting to few more than 9000 Men, whereas the Scots were no less than 20000, gave Duke Hamilton Battle, and after a very short dispute, wherein the English Force under Sir Marmaduke Langdale made him the greatest Opposition, totally routed the Scotch Army, taking all their Artillery, Bag and Baggage and some 9000 prisoners, with the Duke himself in the pursuit Southwards; while he followed the main of the flying Army Northwards, with a resolution of putting a final end to that bulinesse, and to rid himself of the Fears which from thence had hitherto perplexed him. Upon this his hasty advance, Major General Monro who commanded the reserve of 6000 Men to the former Army, and was marching after them, immediately returned to Berwick, and so back into Scotland: Berwick upon Cromwel's approach rendred it self upon terms, and hindered not his advance vance to Edinburgh, where by the Committee of Estates he was very sumptuously welcomed.

Monro as yet and the Earl of Lanerick with him stood to their Arms upon the Hamilton account in the West of Scotland, and the Marquise of Arguile with another party stood for the purer Kirk, which since the Dukes march had recovered its Magistracy and Superiority, and with Cromwel's accessional Troops could give Law to the Kingdom; but because Cromwel was loth to venture a new War there, so far distant from his main design which the Army successes at home had now matured, and his presence only wanting to accomplish it, he so ordered the matter that a Treaty was procured, by which all parties were to lay down their Arms (a greater assurance to him than if the Kirk had been absolute victor) the Hamiltonians to have indemnity, but none of them to be admitted or elected for the next Parliament or Assembly General, so that he so absolutely manacled that Nation, that they had no other use of their hands then to hold them up to heaven at the doleful murder of their natural Prince, whom by their primitive rebellion they had brought to the Block.

Things thus settled in Scotland, he departed thence, having been most highly and magnificently treated by the Grandeers of that Kingdom before and at his departure, and complemented by the Kirk as their deliverer, which he regested in as good Scriptural Language, laying his hand on his breast and demurely looking on their Scotch screwed faces, and laughing to himself what Idiots he had made of those Politicians at their own sanctified Weapons.

In his way homeward he visited the Siege of Pomfret, and was by the Commander in Chief against that that place importuned to see it reduced, but staid only to the gaining of the Town (it being believed that his fortune or experience mastered all things) as he was afterwards at Scarborough, which being upon the point of Surrender, he dispensed for the Honour thereof to stay at that Leagure and have it delivered into his hands: and so posted for the head-Quarters of the Army then at Sr. Albans, having subdued all the Opposition made this Summer 1648, where he was welcomed with the highest gratulations of his late atchievement, especially by the Officers, for as yet the Soldiers knew not what to think of him as to their new Agreement of the People, which was now began again and favoured already by Ireton so much, as that he had it under consideration, and promised to return it with some additions and amendments of his own.

And that proved that accursed Remonstrance of the Army, in which all the former freaks of policy were inserted to make up the number, but the burden thereof was the Treasonable contrivance of the Kings Death, and the altering the Government; for first they remonstrated to the Parliament, That all persons of whatsoever quality or condition, not excepting the King, that had been guilty of the blood spilt in the late War, should be brought to justice and condigne punishment; Next, That a day should be set for the summoning the Prince and the Duke of York, to appear and clear themselves of such things as should be laid to their charge, and if they did not then to be declared incapable of succeeding in the Government. Many such there were of the like Batch, but all of them concluded with a most favourable Aspect to the Royal party, whose fines and compositions they pretended

Pretended to have mitigated, and many more good Morrows, on purpose to amuse even them too, as they had deceived and outwitted the Presbyterian. This pestilent Paper Cromwel got delivered to the House of Commons by a select number of Officers, just as they had almost concluded with the King by a Treaty in the Isle of Wight, to the amazement and fright of all good Christians and Subjects.

And here Cromwel terminated and centred all the crooked lines of his most impious Ambition, resolving to stand or fall by this Conclusion; and therefore immediately, (the Army being then advanced to London, to prosecute this Remonstrance) as he had dispatched Col. Ever to take the King out of the Custody of Hammond, and carry him over to Hurst-Castle, a most unhealthful place, so did he upon notice that the Parliament had voted the Kings Concession a ground for a Peace and Settlement of the Kingdom, command Coll. Pride, a fellow who had not wit enough to consider his business, to seize upon the avenues and passages to the Parliament House, and exclude above 140. Members, whose names were given him in a Roll: which unheard of and unparallel'd Violation, was back'd and secured by Force of Horse and Foot, quartering up and down the City and Suburbs, another lawlesse and forcible Intrusion upon their Charter.

The House being thus purged, as they called it, and others, besides those that were forcibly secluded, absenting themselves for fear of being engaged and overpowred in those wicked Counsels which this Action portended, the remaining Juncts of his Culling, a great part whereof were Army Officers, not amounting in all to 60, passed an Ordinance for Tryal of the King

King; the manner whereof by a high Court of Justice of his and Ireton's own forming and Conception was fully agreed upon, and the King brought from the said Hurst-Castle, by Winchester, Farnham and Windsor, to St. James's, in order thereunto.

But of this lamentable Tragedy so much hath already been said, that I will not add this supernumerary to load him here; though it were his principal Guilt, and to which all his other perpetrations were but intendency: such ministerial subservient practices as hoc excepto, the event not reckoned, might favorably pass for genuine and right policy, influenced and managed by the concurrent Fate of things, and the elevated Subtilties, and undisputable Strengths of a happy Brain, and more prosperous Sword. I will only instance two particulars, relating to this sad and fatal businesse, which discover the Abyffe of this mans Villany.

There was mention made before of Col. John Cromwel; This Gentleman, upon the news the States of Holland had received of this proceeding against the King, at the instance of Our Sovereign, then Prince of Wales residing at the Hague, to them, to mediate and interpose in the businesse, was pitch'd upon by them as the only fit person, because of his relation to Cromwel, (who was looked upon there as the only Contriver of this mischief) to be employed in a message to him, with Credential Letters from the States: whereunto was added a Blank with the Kings Signer, and another of the Princes, both confirmed by the States, for Cromwel to write his own conditions in, if he would now preserve the life of the K.

The Col. putting some confidence in what Oliver had formerly told him, willingly undertook the Errand, and forthwith repaired to London, (just before the Kings Martyrdom) and found him out at his house, but so recluse and lock'd up in his Chamber with an Order that none should know he was within, that he could not be admitted till he had told his name. After mutual Salutations the Colonel desired a word or two in private, which being granted, he began roundly to tell him of the flagitiousness of the Fact, now almost ready to be committed, and how detestable it sounded abroad, adding that of all men living he never should have imagined that he would have had a hand in it, having protested so much for the King in his hearing. Whereupon Cromwel fell to his old shifts, telling him it was not he, but the Army, that 'tis true once he did say such words, but times were altered, and providence seemed to dispose things otherwise; that he had prayed and fasted for the King, but no return that way was yet made to him; whereupon the Coll. stepping back clapt the Dore to, (to the agasting of Cromwel who suspected an assassinate) and coming close to him, Cousin said he, it is no time to dally with words in this matter, look you here (said he (pulling out the abovesaid Papers out of his Pocket) 'tis in your own power not only to make your self but your Posterity, Family, and Relations happy, and honourable for ever, otherwise as they have changed their names before from Williams to Cromwel, so now they must be forced to change it again; for this Fact will bring such an ignominy upon the whole generation of them, that no time will be able to wipe away.

Cromwel here paused, and seemed to ponder with himself, and after a little space said, Cousin, I desire you will give me till night to consider of it, and do you go to your Inne, but go not to Bed till you hear from me, I will confer and consider further about the business. The Colonel did so, and about one of the Clock (within an Evening or two of the Murther) a Messenger came to him and told him he might go to bed, and expect no other answer to carry to the Prince; for the Council of Officers had been seeking God as he also had done the same, and it was resolved by them all that the King must die.

The other is of the same piece with the former (not to mention his threatning of Coll. Downs into an acquiescence with other the Regicides, upon the adjournment of the High Court of Justice, at the Kings request into the Painted Chamber; nor his like usage of Coll. Ingoldsby, and holding his hand while he signed that horrid Sentence, and many other particulars of the same Crime) and perfectly discovers how much an Atheist or Mocker of God he was in his pretended Piety and Devotion.

The very same day appointed for this Murther, Cromwel and the Officers assembled together, to consider of some means if possible (with security still to the Nation) of saving the Kings Life; and many tedious expedients were offered by some not so bloody as the rest, and a speedy Remonstrance to the Parliament proposed, and in the mean while the King should be Respited. Cromwel likewise seemed very forward, expressing how glad he should be if such a thing might be effected; for he was not ignorant, he said, what calumny that Action would draw upon the Army and themselves in particular, though they did nothing therein but in obedience to the Parliament. But before we (said he) proceed in so weighty a matter, let us seek God to know his mind in it; hereunto they

they agreed, and Oliver began a long-winded Prayer and continued in it till a Messenger, whom he had appointed for that purpose, came rapping at the door, and hastily told them that they need not trouble themselves about the King, for the work was done : which, being unexpected to many of them, did at present astonish them, while Cromwel holding up his hands declared to them, that it was not the pleasure of God he should live, and therefore he feared they had done ill to tempt him against his will ; or words to that effect.

When the Kings body was removed and coffined Cromwel, to satishie himself of the full and certain consummation of all his practices against his sacred life, would needs see himself, and upon his return thence he was heard to say, That if he had not been a King he might have lived longer.

Other passages there, were which concern this doleful subject, both preceeding and succeeding it ; as namely Oliver's Conferences with Hugh Peters at Ware, his feigned Letters out of the North to applaud this Fact, and extolling the Justice and Courage of the Army, by whose means it was that the great Cedar of the Forest was fallen, without any noise, and now the time was coming when we should rejoyce under our own Vines and Figtrees---whence this Criminal had his leaves, and we blood instead of Wine. But of this more than enough.

With much craft and cunning did he now hide his daring ambition: for though it was thought as feasible for him now to have seized the Crown as afterwards, considering that his Usurpation was to be maintained by Arms, yet he, well knowing what a Faction there was in the Army of the Levelling principle, le, ventured not to put his oracular Title to a present Tryal, but await more promising opportunities.

In the mean while to quarrel these Levellers, and confine the Democratical Regiment or a Free State (so it was now called) to a narrow compass, and to assume the greatest part of the Government to himself, especially the executive power thereof, according as Ireton had projected the module soon after Newmarket-Heath engagement; a Council of State like the 30. Tyrants of Athens was established, which consisted principally of his Creatures, and these was but forerunners of his single Tyranny, like rays by a burning Glass contracted into one Beam; The word being now given out amongst the Officers of the Army, That this Nation must have one prime Magistrate or Ruler over them, and that the General hath power to make a Law to bind all the Commons of England.

These tendencies to Slavery first of all enraged the Levellers, who, having promised to themselves a good share of the spoil of the Kingdome, found they were meerly deluded, and that all the engagements and agreement were but so many Rattles by which the Army was drawn on to act Cromwel's designs; who had on purpose contrived that Council of Adjutators, to engage the masse of the Souldiery in the danger of his Treasonable conspiracy; that knowing themselves in the same predicament with him, they must resolve to stand by him like a wily Fox, who being pursued, will herd himself among the Sheep, and so avoid the dogs: but all those hazards and necessities being pass'd, the Council of Adjutators was abolished, the Officers now abominating to suffer the Soldiers to sit Cheek by Jole with them any longer, the Expedition
for

for Ireland absolutely concluded on, without satisfaction of Arrears, the Engagement slighted, and the right of Petitioning, which the Army claimed as Freemen, denied by their Officers, who put them upon impeaching the 11 Members for that very reason; and because a neer total Defection of the Army followed upon this soon after, the Engine which Cromwel had used to subvert the Government, being likely to prove his own Ruine,

——— (Nec Lex est justior ulla Quàm necis artifices arte perire suâ,)

though the Fates and his Treachery narrowly prevented it; it will be requisite to shew you the sense of the Army, upon the present State of the Usurpation in this following Petition.

To his Excellency Thomas Lord Fairfax, and his Council of Officers.

May it please your Excellency, and your Council of Officers.

WE have lately made our humble Address unto the Peoples Representatives in Parliament, concerning some relief to our selves and the Commonwealth, by way of Petition, the meanest and lowest degree of an Englishman's Freedom that we know of; and yet the same (to our astonishment) hath much distasted and imbittered divers of our Superiour Officers (in this Council convening) against us, as we perceive, and that even unto death.

We therefore being willing to avoid all occasion of offence and division, and to clear our selves of all imputations thereof, that in Justice and Reason may be convinc-

convinced against us, desire, that you would be pleased to consider, that we are English Souldiers, engaged for the Freedomes of England; and not Outlandish Mercenaries, to butcher the People for Pay, and serve the pernicious ends of ambition and will in any person under Heaven. That we do not imagine our selves absolved from the solemn Engagement at New-market-Heath, but to be still obliged before God and the whole World to pursue the just ends thereof; and you may remember the many Promises and Declarations to the People upon that account, which like the Blood of Abel cries for Justice upon the perfidious infringers and perverters thereof in this Army. You may further remember that it hath been a Principle by you asserted and avowed; that our being Souldiers hath not deprived us of our Right as Commoners; and to Petition the People in Parliament, we do account in the number of our Birthrights; and you may remember that in the time of the Domination of the eleven Members, you complained against their then endeavour to suppress the Liberty of the Souldiers to Petition, as an insufferable infringement of the right of the Army and People: and we hope you did not then condemn it in them, to justify it in your selves: when the Power was theirs, it was then condemned; but now it is yours, how comes it to be justified? In the point of Petitioning we expected your Encouragement, and not to have manacles and fetters laid upon it: It is not the bare name or shadow thereof will satisfy us, while we are galled of the essence of it. It is a perfect freedom which we desire, not therein to be subjected under Gradual Negative Voyces of a Captain, a Colonel, your Excellency, or your Council: to pass the Test from one Negative voyce to another for its improvement, we account as the most vexatious Labyrinth of thraldome that in this point can be devised, worse than all oppositions and infringements of the II. Members; we had rather that in plain terms you would deny us our right of Petitioning, and pronounce and proclaim us absolute Slaves and Vassals to our Officers than secretly to rob us of the right it self. God hath in some measure opened our eyes, that we can see and perceive; and we desire plain dealing, and not to be met half way with smooth expedients, and Mediums facing both wayes, with specious and fair pretences, to overtake our sudden apprehensions, and unawares steal upon us, and so be defeated, as too often we have been, to the woe and misery of the People, and of us: but The burnt Child dreads the Fire.
the

Further we desire you to consider, That the strength, the honour and being of the Officer, yea and of this Council (under God) doth consist in the arms of the Soldier. Is it not the Soldier that endureth the heat and burthen of the day, and performeth that work whereof the Officer beareth the glory and name? For what is it the Officer can do without the Soldier? If nothing, why are they ashamed to deny us our right to Petition.

We have long waited in silence, even while we perceived any hopes of any real redresse from them. But now finding the Military power in an absolute Usurpation of the Civil Jurisdiction, and in the place of the Magistrate executing that Authority, by which the Sword of War is incroached into the self same hands under one Military head; we disclaim and abhor it, as not having any hand or assent therein at all. And we find a strange and unexpected constitution of a Council of State, such as neither we nor our forefathers thers were ever acquainted with', intrusted with little lesse than an unlimited power, and with the whole force both of Sea and Land, in which are combined the most pernicious interests of all Tyrannies. And which hath already swallowed up half our Parliament, and we fear to be an expedient to cut off our Parliaments for ever; for if this Council of State survive the Parliament, how shall we obtain a new Representative? If the Parliament sit but till a new one be ready to take their places, farewell Parliaments, farewell Freedoms.

Further, we find the just and legal way of trial, by twelve men of the Neighbourhood in criminal cases, utterly subverted in this new constitution of an High Court; a President for ought we know to frame all the Courts of England by, and to which our selves may be as well subjected as our enemies. And considering not one oppression is removed; not one vexation in the Law abated, nor one punctilio of freedom restored, or any fair hopes at all appearing, but oppression heaped upon the back of oppression, double cruelty upon cruelty; we therefore from those many considerations betook our selves as Englishmen to make our Address unto the Parliament, as the proper refuge and Authority of the people for our and their Address, in which by birth we challenge a right, as also by the price and purchase of our hazard and blood; and our Civil Rights we cannot yield up, we shall first rather yield up our lives:

And thus after the weak measure of our understandings, we judge we have given a rational and full account of the occasion and reason of our Petitioning, and we hope satisfactory to your Excellency and this Council, humbly praying that you will make a charitable and fair construction thereof.

FH

MUSEUM
BRITANNICUM

And we further desire, that you will take special notice of the serious Apprehensions of a part of the People in behalf of the Common-wealth, presented to the House by Lieut. Coll. John Lilburn, and divers other Citizens of London, and the Borough of Southwark Feb. 26. now published in Print. To the which with due thankfulness to those our faithful friends the promoters and presenters thereof, we do freely and cheerfully concur, to stand or fall in the just prosecution thereof as the most absolute Medium to our peace and freedom that hath been produced, and we hope it will produce an happy effect upon this Council, to prevent the otherwise unavoidable dissolution and division that will ensue upon us all, which to prevent shall be the faithful endeavours of (Sir)

Your Excellencies most humble Servants and Souldiers, Robert Ward. Simon Grant. William Sawyer.
Thomas Watson. George Jelles.

These Petitioners being seized, were tryed at a Council of War, but (for fear of too much exasperating the Army) were only sentenc'd in this manner, Coll. Baxter being then President, who delivered judgment in these sententious learned words.

Gentlemen; for so I think I may without offence call you, for as yet you are Souldiers; but truly you are not long to continue so: For you are guilty of high crimes, as your Letter here by you owned doth manifest, being Scandalous as to the Parliament, Council of State, High Court of Justice, and tending to breed a mutiny in the Army; for which you have in a high measure deserved death; but through the mercy of the Court that is waved, and truly they have waved the Sentence again and again, and now they are come as low as possibly they can: and ^{it} being late I shall declare unto you your several Sentences, which are as followeth.

You

MUSEUM
BRITANNICUM

You shall ride with your faces towards the horse Tails before the heads of your several Regiments, with your faults written upon your Breasts, and your Swords be broken over your heads, and so cashired the Army, as not worthy to ride therein; and a Proclamation to be made, that none shal receive you into any Troop, Company, or Garrison. And this I would have you look upon as a great mercy of the Court.

Which sentence was accordingly executed upon them, in the Great Palace-Yard at Westminster, March 6. to the exasperation of the Army.

Soon after all the Army, quartering near London, rendezvouzed at Ware; where several Regiments, among whom was Cromwel's of Horse, (in pursuance of the same Petition, and to be known by themselves) wore white in their hats: Oliver had intimation of it, and thereupon he appointed two Regiments of Horse from further quarters who were ignorant of this Combination to appear there likewise. Being all drawn up in Battalia, Cromwel with an angry and down look rides round, and of a sudden Commands one of those two Regiments to encompassse a Regiment of Foot, which being done he commanded four men by their names out of the body, and committed them with his own hands to the Marshal, and immediately called a Council of War, (while the rest of their Partakers slunk their White Colours into their Pockets, and trembled at this boldness of Cromwel) & tryed and condemned them: but by the favour of the Court they were to cast Lots for their Lives, two only to dye; by which means the two Guilty persons, and whom Cromwel chiefly aimed at, and lusty Fellows also, escaped, but the two other sneaking ignorant Fellows were presently shot to death, upon agreen Bank by the other two, in the Face of the Army.

But yet could not this humour be purged out of the Army, though another Leveller bled for it, one Lockyer a Trooper, who for promoting the engagement and agreement was shot to death at St. Paul's Church-yard, and was attended to his Grave like a General Officer, a thousand people of the Lilburnian Faction following his Herse, all of them wearing Black and Sea-green Ribbons; Colours that denoted a Storm was coming, the whole Army being now generally leavened with the same principle, and furiously enraged at this Butchery of their Fellow Soldiers, being avowedly egged on by the said Lilburn, and secretly encouraged by the Royal party, who promised them their assistance in case they should need it.

And it was seen when too late by the Soldiery, (the Instruments of that Tyranny) that they had borrowed their Libertinisme at a dear rate, the price of their Lives; like Crabanders they should domineer for a while, but then become Villimes to their short ridiculous Usurpation, while the revenges of their Rebellion followed their endeavours after those vain-glorious shadows of their own casting.

The first formidable eruption of it was at Salisbury, where Col. Scroops Regiment of Horse laid aside their Officers, and with their Colours marched thence, in order to a conjunction with Harrisons, Iretons, and Skippons Regiments, who had confederated (by means of those Adjutators) in the same design: which affair admitting no delay, Fairfax and Cromwel with his own Regiment advanced to them to Bagshot, and so to Alton, where they had notice that that they were marched to Abington, whither (after a tedious march of forty miles in one day) the General came; and Cromwel fell presently to work with his old arts of Treachery: for Harrisons Regiment was hasting to the Conjunction.

His first fineness in order to their reducing was the offer of Treaty, wherein satisfaction might be mutually given, and that done, that neither party should come within Ten miles one of another; whereupon the Levellers marched to Burford, and being opposed at a Pass called Newbridge over the River, to avoid any quarrel, and hoping the Soldiery there would no doubt joyn with them upon the Treaty, passed a mile lower, and arriving at the Town, relied so much upon the Generals and Cromwell's engagements, that most of them had put their Horses to grass, leaving a Corps de guard, of some 60 men, the the whole party making in all 900. consisting of 12. entire Troops, reputed the best in the Army, and whose defeat would have cost many mens lives, if the Army would have stood against them. But to save that difficulty, while those secure Troops were resting themselves, and their Horses put in the adjoining Meadows, about 12. a Clock at night Coll Reynolds fell into their quarters, having notice from some Traytors within of their posture, and presently mastered the Guard, not dreaming of such a Camisado, or suspecting of an Enemy, and seized most of the other, then tipling or asleep. Here were taken neer 900 Horse, and 400 Prisoners, whereof three only were Executed, one Thompson and two more, who dyed very resolutely, Cornet Den, expressing his grief and sorrow, was reprieved at the instant of Execution, which their fellows beheld from the

Leads of the Church, and were saluted with a Message of Decimation; but that Cromwel might ingratiate with the Army, for his sake, and at his instance they were all pardoned, and sent home to their own houses. The great Chieftain of them, being pursued as he was marching towards the party, took into Willingborough-wood, where courageously defending himself, he was killed by Carbine shot, refusing to take quarter at such perfidious peoples hands. This Hurly Burly being over, and ended like a flash, the General came to Oxford, where he was highly treated, and he and Oliver made Doctors of the Civil Law.

This proved the utter Suppression of that faction, and rendred the Army entirely at his command, without any farther dispute of their Leading; so that they presently submitted to the Lot which Regiments should be sent to Ireland (then almost reduced to the Kings obedience by the Marquis of Ormond) which thus decreed it, viz. 11. Regiments, Iretons, Scroops, Hortons, and Lamberts. Of Horse, One of Dragoons under Coll. Abbot. Of Foot, Eures, Cooks, Hewsons, and Deans. And three new ones, viz. Cromwels, Venables, and Phayrs.

Cromwel was ordained Commander in Chief, and tituladoed with the Style of Lord Governor of Ireland; while Fairfax was left here to attend the Parliament, and pass away his time in the Dotages of his Success, giving him the Honour of subduing that Realm, and preparing it to his Usurpation.

He, with a very potent Army was now landed at Dublin. Whereupon a strong Garrison of 2500. Foot and 300 Horse, resolved men under the charge of Sir Arthur Aston, was put into Drogheda, the nearest rest Garrison to the late defeat of the Marquis of Ormond; which Cromwel (having refreshed his Army a while at Dublin) came to besiege. The Town was stormed resolutely thrice, and as well defended; Sir Arthur Aston being so confident, that he advised the Lord Lieutenant not to precipitate any thing, for he should hold them play a while; but in the third assault Colonel Wall being unfortunately killed, his dismayed Soldiers listened to the offer of quarter before they had need of it, and admitted them upon those terms. Cromwel having notice that the Flower of the Irish Army was in his hands, gave order to put all in Arms to the Sword, where were killed Sir Arthur Aston, Sir Edmund Varney, Coll. Warren, Coll. Dun, Finglass, Tempest, &c. with 3000 Soldiers the best in that Kingdome.

He came next before Wexford, which having refused to accept of a Garrison, now the Enemy was under their Walls, was content to admit of 500 men under the command of Sir Edmund Butler, and the Lord Lieutenant came also in sight of the Town; before whose face Stafford the Governour of the Castle basely betrayed it to Cromwel, together with the Town who there treacherously murdered 2000 more.

Most abominably and barbarously cruel he was in this place; for near 200 of the better sort, and the beautifullest Women of the City, having (upon the Town being entred) fled to the Cross, and with the command of their charming eyes, and those melting tears, prevailed upon the Souldiers for quarter; now at his coming thither, and after a laughing jeering enquiry what they did there, and other mocking insultations, were commanded to be knock'd on the head;

which those that promised them life nobly refusing, He commanded another Regiment to encompass them, and there most horribly massacred them all.

Rosse was the next place whither a Garrison was sent under the command of Luke Taaff, with order (the Town not being tenable) to render upon Conditions, which accordingly (a breach being made) they did, and marched away with their Arms. His next attempt was upon Duncannon, but the noble Wogan and the English Cavaliers gave him a foyle; hence he retreated to Ross, where he made a floating bridge, that so, having a passage to the other side, he might compel Ormond either to divide his Army to observe his motions, or otherwise to get a passage into Munster, where he held intelligence with the several places that would then Revolt; and accordingly for all my Lord Taaff was sent thither before hand to secure them, yet Tonghall, Corke, and all the English Towns of Munster openly Revolted, and many of my Lord Inchiqueens men, allured by Money and Commands in Cromwel's Army, ran over to the Enemy; and his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant having lost the opportunity of Fighting Cromwel, by his dislodging from Duncannon by night when the Irish were cheerful and earnest to engage, was never after in a condition fit to venture a Battel. He therefore passes over this Bridge and so into the County of Kilkenny facing his enemy and moving up and down after him, while his Lieut. G. Jones with parties took in the Castles, and Carrick was wretchedly betrayed to him by Martin, that commanded there; whence Cromwel passes his Army into Munster, and takes several Castles by the appearance only of his Horse: only at Kilteran he received a repulse, but but Ballisannon was sold to him; Kilkenny was taken next, after a stout defence made, the Townsmen complying contrary to the Soldiers knowledge, who were driven into the Castle and there conditioned. The next enterprize he went in hand with was Clonmel, kept by Major General Hugh Neal, who behaved himself so well, that the Enemy having lost 2500 men before it had gone away without it, had it not been that the Garrison wanted powder, so that they got over the River to Waterford in the night, leaving the Townsmen to make conditions for themselves, which the Enemy not knowing the Soldiers were gone readily granted. It is very observable here, that though against the advice of the Council of War he had resolved on this Storm; upon the Defeat, he ascribed it wholly to their confidence in the Arm of Flesh and presently enjoined his state Crambe of a Fest throughout the Army. Soon after Coll. Rich received a brush from my Lord Broghil in the County of Cork, where the Bishop of Rosse being taken was hanged.

I have thus briefly discoursed of the war in Ireland, that I might hasten to the grand event, and from the Camp (after another expedition) conduct him to the Palace, the main consequence of his life, which rendered all his other actions so notable and conspicuous.

The Irish War thus in a manner ended, and the Scotch War ready to Commence, the Committee of Estates there, having concluded with the King at Breda, and he upon his Voyage to that Kingdom, where all correspondence with the English was by Proclamation forbidden, and all manner of Provision stopt from carrying into England, though the Juncto at Westminster had used all Artifices to keep the Scots from closing with him, who were so far disposed thereto, that they had barbarously murdered the Great Marquis of Montross, a Hero far surpassing Oliver in Conduct, and who was untimely and unfortunately taken away from the rescue of his Country; Cromwel (like a Fury) was ready at hand to take a revenge of that Fact. For having been secretly called for over from Ireland, to amuse all parties, (both the Irish who trembled at his presence, and made no considerable resistance against him and his Fortune; and the General himself at home, who expected not such his sudden rivalship to his command, which gave him no time for mature consideration of the design; the Scots, who though alarmed by frequent rumours of an English Invasion, yet were not so forward in their Levies, as having assurance of Fairfax's dissatisfaction) he was now waisted over into England, preventing the Letters he had sent to the States to know their express pleasure for his departing that Kingdom.

On the beginning of June he returned by the way of Bristol from Ireland to London, and was welcomed by Fairfax the General, many Members of Parliament and Council of State at Hounslow-beath, and more fully complemented at his Lodgings, and in Parliament by the Thanks of the House, and the like significant Address of the Lord Maior, &c. of London, being looked upon as the only person, to the Eclipse and diminution of the Generals Honor, which we shall presently see him paramount in the same supreme Command.

The World that considered the carriage of this Politique towards his Prince, and with what impetuous violence, and short-lived extempore Counsels,
He

He had bereaved him of his Life, had wondered that hitherto he had suffered the Command of the Army to rest in Fairfax's hand, and had not practised some quicker expedient to remove him; that having finished the work of his Generation (as they canted it with Essex) he did not give him a Fig for his labour; but Cromwel, who courted his Minion of Providence, and devoted himself to her care and ruination of his designs, would not rashly precipitate his Ambition without her Augury, but await the Assistance and Concurrence of some promising Revolution, which those many Military cross reencounters of that turbulent New State did certainly bode. And the Scotch War, now evening, the lucky minute was come, and his Brazen Head told him TIME IS; for from hence he dated his Empire and Sultanship, and the Æra Olivaria, choosing to derive his Succession to the Supreme Power, rather from the unperplex'd Tradition of the Sword; than from the upstart bold Title to, and a forcible wresting of the Scepter. And yet such Helps and Hints he way-laid to his Throne, that it was rumoured soon after abroad, that he was descended of the British Princes, and near allied to Henry the Seventh, the glory of that race. But to proceed.

This Command of course was devolved upon my Lord Fairfax, and he desired to accept it, but he being inscrupled by some of the Presbyterian Ministers (who were highly incensed at this war) as it was cunningly foreseen by Oliver and his Party, (who never endeavoured his satisfaction) and pretending a reluctance from the Obligations of the National Covenant to engage against their Brethren, totally declined it, transferring the long expected Military Supremacy, by a Vote of the Parliament to Cromwel, who

who very zealously accepted the Charge, and with all readiness prepared for the expedition; which made the second Trophy or Garland of those strangely and wonderfully prosperous Free-States of England.

On the 12. of June it had been resolved that the Army should advance Northward, but it was towards the end of July before they arrived there; for on the 21. of that Month Cromwel quartered at Berwick, from whence he sent a Letter and Declaration to the Committee of Estates, fraught with hypocritical canting expressions, which the said Committee suppressed, returning answer, that they would reply to it by Messengers of their own; and lest any of their people should be deluded by the like fair words, they made it Treason for any person to correspond with the English, and sell a driving all their Cattle and Provision in the parts next adjacent to them, beyond Edenborough.

Cromwel's Army was now reckoned 16000 effective, with which he came first to Mordington, his Head-quarters July the 25. thence to Hadington, within 12. miles of Edinburgh, on the Hills whereabouts the Scots had encamped themselves, declining to engage till all their additional Forces were come out of the High-lands. On the 25 of July the English advanced, and attempted one of the said Hills, where a small party of the Scots were, and beat them presently off; when a party of Scotch Horse fell in the Rear with such fury and vigour that they wholly disordered it, and with Relerves and Fresh bodies seconded and persued this advantage; which being perceived by Major General Lambert and Coll. Whaley, who had the Rear-guard, they courageously repulsed repulsed them to their Trenches: in which Action Lambert had his Horse shot under him, was run through the Arm with a Lance, and taken Prisoner, but was rescued by one Lieutenant Empson. This past, and the Army wet and weary in their way to Muscleborough; betwixt 3 and 4 in the morning, another party of some 1500 Horse, the flower of the Army, being veterane Blades, under the Command of Coll. Montgomery and Straghan, fell with great fury and more exact valour upon them betwixt sleeping and waking, and brought a Terrible fright and dismay upon the whole Army, Charging almost clear through upon the Sands; but returning with their Prisoners, were set upon, by fresh Troops under Coll. Okey in good order, and forced to double their speed home to their Camp, having lost an hundred men, (to the same number in the former attempt) and some of their Officers slain and wounded; but came off otherwise with honour enough, giving the Invaders little hopes of so easie a victory and Conquest as the Fates had decreed to them, and their invincible Fortune.

Several jealousies, animosities, and discontents were now reigning among the Scots, more supremely than the Kings Authority; the Kings friends wholly discountenanced and laid by, even Presbyterians themselves no way understanding one another, some willing to give the King his Rights without more stipulation and Engagements; others of them thinking they could not sufficiently debase his Authority, and that it should wholly depend on the Kirk; and to that purpose several irreverend Postulata were put to him, beyond the Tenour of the Treaty at Breda: and in fine that party prevailed so, as that the Army, then on foot, was in effect but very little for the Kings Interest

Interest and Service, but was wholly at the disposal of the rigid Covenanters. This was not unknown to Cromwel, who thereupon never ceased Scribbling and Divulging of the English Armies good intention to the People of Scotland; With whom they have no quarrel, but against a Malignant powerful Faction, who had brought in the King, to the disturbance of the publick National-peace and Friendship betwixt the two People; and that he was willing by Conference to give and receive satisfaction therein, otherwise to decide the Justice of that cause by Battle. To which when no answer would be returned, he advanced on the 10. of August (having recruited his Army by those Provisions that were plentifully brought by Sea, the Fleet Sailing an even pace with him and observing the same signals) on the West-side of Edinburgh up to the Line of the Scotch Army playing his Canon, which were likewise answered, and Encamped on Pencland-Hills a little above Edinburgh-Castle, intending to March for Queens-ferry; but the Passes were so difficult, and other Considerations intervened, that he proceeded no further. Next morning came a Letter to him with a Declaration from the Estates and Kirk by sound of Trumpet, Declaring that the quarrel being now stated, and the King ready to consent to their demands, they were resolved to put it to the Issue; and that the World may see what that was like to prove, it will be worthy the memory of those Transactions, to particularize them in this short abstract.

Cromwel being thus far advanced into Scotland, beyond the most advised Fears of the Parliament of Scotland (who had newly welcomed the King at Sr. Johnstons) and their Army yet unprepared to fight him, they thought fit to entertain his Time and diversify his his Haft with a Declaration, wherein moſt abominably they diſowned the King, without ſuch and ſuch Satisfaction, to the tenor of the moſt rigid and unduſtful conditions, that the worſt of Rebels could have put upon a Prince; which being once confirmed and aſſented to by him, they would be ready to give Bat-tel as the quarrel ſhould then be ſtated, and upon which they might expect a bleſſing. But this wile advantaged not the Kirk, but only ſerved as a Directory to Oliver, where he ſhould level his Treasonable projects.

To this Cromwel takes very good occaſion to reply, and help out their Sophiſtry with ſome more of his own; and to let the Scots ſee of how near affinity the Kirk and the Congregational way were in this reſpect to the King, he permitted, nay, cauſed their Declaration to be publickly read to his Army; putting the Scotch-Remonſtrants upon theſe Dilemma's; That their profeſſed diſowning of Malighants, and receiving and aſſiſting their Head and Chief, in whom all their hope lies, cannot conſiſt in common ſenſe or prudence; reciting (as evidence thereof) the late Popiſh affairs in Ireland, and Prince Ruperts roving at Sea. That ſuppoſe He (the King) ſhould give ſecurity of his turning, it muſt be ſome other way than by a few and feigned formal ſubmiſſions, for it is his neceſſity and his old Complices that counſel him to that Compliance: Nor is it poſſible for the Scots (in the way that they are now in) to be able to ſecure themſelve or England; and concludes, that upon this quarrel, if they be ready to fight, his Army attends there for that purpoſe; and therefore the Scots cannot complain for want of an opportunity.

Theſe peſtilent and alike dangerous Papers, which
in

in effect seemed rather an agreement than cause of quarrel between the Antagonists) were warily considered by some, even of the Kirk-men who loved the King, as of sudden and desperate consequence to his Majesties Person and Government, so highly vilified and dis-regarded; so that a Declaration (to the liking of the Kirk) was extorted from Him, that there might no cause of pretence remain, either for their obstinate carriage towards him, or ready compliance with the Enemy.

Hereupon the English Army advanced again, and though several Bodies of Scotch Horse appeared, yet they presently withdrew upon their approach; which that it might not be altogether frustrate, Cromwel in sight of them caused a Garrison (called Redhouse, within a mile and a half of Edinburgh) to be Stormed, wherein were taken 60 Foot, and the House made renable and manned by the English: while the Scots (being necessitated for Provisions, and to joyn with some other Forces from Fife and the West) had marched two miles beyond Edinburgh, having a great Hill on the one side, and the City and a River on the other, so that it was very hazardous to engage them, being drawn up in Battalia, the great Guns playing on both sides. In which posture and attendance the Scots and English stood, and neither changed ground, till Provisions growing scarce, Cromwel retreated to Penckland-hills (Lambert having had some discourse and conference with Stranghan, &c. about the former equity of their cause, de lanâ caprinâ) and thence with some difficulty (by reason of bad weather) to Muscleborough, for Provant, and thence a few dayes after to Dunbar, with intention by shipping or any other way to get into England, being now closely followed lowed by the Scotch Army in their Rear; who rightly guessing the English to be weakened with long Marches and want of Viſtual, made cock-ſure of a total Victory, which ſnatching at before it was ripe for them, fearing nothing more than that they would eſcape them, they ſaw themſelves miſerably fruſtrated, and their deſpairing Enemy, a moſt insulting Conquerour.

On Sunday at night, the firſt of September, the English (making at moſt not above 12000 men) came to Dunbar, whither the Scots (keeping cloſe at their Heels) came alſo, and drew up their whole Army, conſiſting of between 20. and 24. thouſand men, upon a high Hill within a mile of the Town, to the great amazement at firſt of the English; but deſpair adding Reſolution to their courage, they preſently drew out in Battalia in the Cornfield near adjoining, and ſo ſtood all night, being encamped upon a Neck of land, whoſe breadth was not a mile and a half from Sea to Sea; ſo that they were by Land quite coop'd up. In confidence therefore of an aſſured Victory, David Leſkley, who commanded this Kirk Army in chief, began to advance as early as the Sun next morning, and drew down the Hill fixing at the foot thereof, and about four a clock in the afternoon brought down his Train, there being a great Ditch betwixt both the Armies. That night the English (by Command placed themſelves cloſe to the Ditch, and placed their Field-pieces likewise in every Regiment, that they might be in a readineſs in caſe the Enemy ſhould attempt any thing upon them, who were vainly expecting terms of a rendition; boasting that they had them in a worſe pound, than the King had the Earl of Effex at Leſtithiel in Cornwall.

The

The Ministers especially, having their voice in the Council of war held by this Kirk Army, most earnestly urged the Engagement and fight (against those that were of opinion to let the English escape, and not venture the fortune of War, upon an Enemy made desperate: of which there were so many sad examples) saying that God had delivered Agag meaning Cromwel into their power, and if they let him go, would require him at their hands.

On Tuesday morning at four of the Clock, a Brigade of the English Army drew down to possess themselves of a Pass upon the Road, between Edinburgh and Berwick; which being had, they might with the more ease and advantage, make their way home, and in order thereto pass over to the Enemy, to fall upon them. This Brigade consisted of three Regiments of Horse of M. G. Lamberts, Commiss. Gen. Whaleys, and Coll. Lilburns, and two of Foot, one whereof was Prides. This gave the Scots a great Alarm, and a sore dispute happened about the Pass, which lasted above an hour, the great Guns playing in the mean time against both the bodies. At length that stout Brigade gained and possessed the Pass, much gallantry and bravery being shewed on both sides. This Pass lay at Copperspeth in the English way homewards, to impede which, they had drawn off their best Horse upon the right Wing to receive the English, whose word was the Lord of Hosts, theirs The Covenant.

The Enemy charged hereupon with their Lanciers, so that the Horse gave way a little, but immediately rallied, and the foot advancing to second them, the Scots were charged so home, that they put them presently to the rout, it being about six a Clock in the morning, morning, the left wing of Horse without striking one stroke, following the same way. The Foot seeing this rout and flight of the Horse, and not able in any order by reason thereof to engage, were all of a sudden so confused and confounded, that without any resistance or offer of Engagement they threw down their Arms and fled, giving the English the full pursuit of them above 8 mile beyond Hadington, only one stout Regiment of Highlanders, who began the fight, maintained it most bravely and fearlessly after the ruine and rout of their Army till scarce 20 of them were left, some of them fighting and making use of their Swords as they lay wounded upon the ground, to the lessening the ignominy of that defeat by their singular and conspicuous valor, which hath reared it self an honourable monument, amidst the inglorious dust of so many Cowards. The number of the slain were 4000. 9000 Prisoners, many whereof were desperately wounded; and 10000 Arms, all their Ammunition, Bag and Baggage: Prisoners of Note were Sir James Lamisdale, Lieutenant General of the Army, the Lord Libberton imployed by the States to the King lately, and died of his wounds presently after the fight at Dunbar, Adjutant General Bickerton, Scout-master Campbel, Sir William Douglas, Lord Cranston, and Collonel Gurden; 12 Lieutenant Colonels, 6 Majors, 42 Captains, 75 Lieutenants, 17 Corners, 2 Quarter-masters, 110 Ensigns, Foot and Horse Colours 200. 27 Guns, some Brasse, Iron and Leather, with the losse of not above 300 English, and one Major Rookisly who dyed after of his wounds; there was likewise taken the Purse to the great Seal of Scotland, which was presently sent up to London, and the Colours with those taken before at Preston, ordered forthwith to be hung up in Westminster-hall; The full Contents of all which was signified in a Letter from the General in his usual strain of devout zeal, tending very much to strengthen the Independent against the Presbyterian at home, and the advancement of a pretended Common-wealth to the imitation of the rest of the world; the latter part thereof for the severer Aspect it had towards the Ministry in favour of Anabaptists, with which the Army swarmed, I have here inserted. —

The Ministers of Scotland have hindered the passage of those things (meaning his affection to the good people of Scotland) to those to whom we intended them, and now we see that not only the deceived people, but some of the Ministers (three or four) are fallen in the fight. This is the great band of the Lord, and worthy of the consideration of those who taking into their hands the instrument of a foolish Shepherd, to wit, meddling with worldly policies, and mixtures of earthly power, to set up that which they call the Kingdome of Christ, (which is neither it, nor if it were it, would such be found effectual to that end) and neglect, or trust not to the word of God, the sword of the Spirit, which is alone able and powerful to that end, and when trusted to, will be found effectually able, &c. This is Humbly offered for their sakes (who have lately turned too much aside) that they might return again to Preach Jesus Christ; &c. and then no doubt they will deserve and find your protection and encouragement. Which humble offer was to command a strict Inquisition upon them, as those most probable to obstruct the new module of his future greatness.

The glory of this field, though it were by his own party ascribed to his valour, yet it laid a great blemish on his Conduct, and indeed the rescue of his honour was principally to be referred to G. Monck, whose company he had obliged in this expedition, (being very understanding in the choice, and as subtle in the shaking-off his Friends and Familiars.) He had newly had a Regiment conferred on him, made up of recruits and other imperfect Companies, and did now at the Generals request draw and design the fight, and embattle the Army, and seconded that deliberate speculation with forwardest of action, for which indeed most of the Officers were very praiseworthy. After the fight Cromwell used some catching courtesies to the wounded Soldiers, and the feeblest sort of Prisoners (it being his usual Injunction to his Chyrurgions, to have as much care of the Enemies sick, as of his own, to oblige their fair report of his victorious Generosity) but the poor High-landers, and such like, paid dear for that partial kindness shewed their Country-men, as many as with difficulty escaped Famine being sold for slaves to the American Islands.

On the fourteenth of September, General Cromwell marched out of Edenburgh with 7 daies provision, for the Scots had not left any manner of subsistence betwixt that and Sterling, and on the 15. reached beyond Linlithgow, but through bad weather was constrained to retreat thither that night for shelter, the 16. to Falkirk within a mile of Sterling, from whence fresh Letters of the old strain were sent into that City, but the Trumpeter was not suffered to enter, whereupon order was given for a storm, but upon better thoughts of the danger, forbore; so that on the 19. of Sept. they returned to Linlithgow, (whither came General Dean to him from Shipboard, being newly arrived at Leith, in the Speaker Frigate) and fortified the Town, being the road way betwixt Edinburgh and Sterling, and a sufficient Garrison was left to maintain it, and on the 22. the English returned to Edinburgh, where Col. Whalley had offered the Ministers fled to the Castle leave to come out and Preach in their several Parishes, but they refused: Another Cajole to the Kirk.

Cromwel encamping and traversing hereabouts with his Army, but not being able to effect any thing against the main Army of the Kings that lay on Sterling-side, resolved to be doing with a Party that then lay in the West of Scotland, under the Command of the Colonels Ker and Straughan, with whom Cromwel had maintained an open intercourse, and had proffered them a Cessation; driving at this, to take them off and subdivide the Nation in several parties. And the effect of his Papers, taxing the Scots with the admission of the King upon the old Malignant score, did operate as he projected; for thereupon out comes a Declaration or Remonstrance from these Western fellows, full of sawcy and treasonable language, which accordingly was voted both by the Commissioners of the Kirk, and the Committee of Estates, to be scandalous and seditious, Sir James Stewart, and Sir John Chiesly, and one Mr. Levison (who seemed to countenance it) were strictly watched, and Straughan taken and made Prisoner in Dunbarton, and after in Cathenes-Castle, whence he escaped and came over to the English at Edinburgh: but 'twas more the sacred hunger of Gold, than zeal for Religion, made him first betray his King, and his Country after, and we shall see all Cromwel's Pro-selytes selytes of that Nation, both Dundas, Warreston, and Giffan to love nothing so much as the Mammon of Presbytery.

Straughan thus removed, Major Gen: Lambert was sent to prevail with Ker, either by blows or words, the latter being thought as feasible as the former; and accordingly on the last of November, having difficultly found, and passed a Ford over Hambleton River, Ker got notice of it, and resolutely fell into the Major Generals Quarters at a Town of that name; but the Horse being in a readiness to receive him, he lost a 100. Men, had his right hand almost cut off, and was taken Prisoner, and the rest of his party, being five Regiments of Horse, two whereof were the Earl of Cassells, and Lord Kirconbrights, pursued as far as Ayre, where Commissary General Whalley was now left to command in chief in those Western parts: Cromwel had marched with his Army this way as far as Glasgow, in October, but understanding or dreading the Enemy would come and relieve Edinburgh Castle with Provisions, and another Governour (being in Treaty with the present for a summe of money) he forthwith retired; having there took and Garrisoned two Houses, while Coll. Whalley took in Dalkeith, and another nest of Moss-Troopers, yet his coming thither hindred Major Gen. Montgomery from marching into those parts, to reduce Ker likewise to his obedience to the King.

Edinburgh-Castle had been besieged some Months and upwards, with little loss on either side, save that the great Guns from the Castle did some Mischief in Edinburgh-streets, and one Capt. Hamilton was shot in the head with a Musquet, as he was viewing the Castle, and the Morter-pieces made semblance of great terrour and annoyance to the besieged; a Mine was likewise carried on some 60. foot, the Stone being cut all the way; but then they could proceed no further, being come to the Rock whereon the Castle stands: Nevertheless the Derbyshire Miners (being 12. in number) did what they could to proceed, the enemy throwing Pitch and Flax, and other combustible stuff into the Works. At last the personated Hostility came to a period, and Dundas old Levens Son in Law, pretending want of Water, offered a Parley, and having premised a colourable request of ten days time, to send to the Committee of Estates, by whom he said he was intrusted, which he knew was to be denied; after several missives betwixt Cromwel and him, concluded the rendition of that most important place to the Kings Service, in these Articles agreed on, betwixt Major Abernethy *Dundas*es man, and Capt. Henderson on one side, and Coll. Monck, and L. Coll. White on the other, (it was alwayes before called the Maiden, it may henceforth be called the Prostitute-Castle) the Articles were as follow.

That the Castle should be surrendered to his Excellency Oliver Cromwel, with all the Ordinances, Arms, Magazine, and Furniture of War thereunto belonging, on Tuesday the 24. of December. 2. That the Governour, Officers, and Soldiers, should march with Drums beating, &c. in military posture, to such place as they shall appoint. 3. The publique moveables, private writs and evidences to be removed to Sterling. 4. That Proclamation should be made for all that had goods in the Castle, to come or send, to owne and receive them. 5. All sick Officers and Souldiers, as well such as hurt (in reputation) to have liberty to stay in Edinburgh

Edinburgh, and the English to provide Horses and Wagons for the Governour and other Officers, and Horses to be given on the Scots part for performance.

There were found in it Five French Cannon, nine Dutch half Cannon, two Culverings, two demy Culverings, two Minions, two Falcons, twenty eight Brass Drakes called Monkeys, two Petards, betwixt seven and eight thousand Arms, neer 80 Barrells of Powder, and a like store of Cannon shot: Col. Fenwick, was presently upon the surrender, made Governour of this and Leith; Sir Arthur Haslerigge, and Mr. Scot were present at the Rendition thereof, and then departed, their work being done; which that it may appear for a piece of the vilest treachery any Scot ever committed (though Cromwel ascribes it in his Letter to the Speaker, to the alone wisdom of God beyond all humane power and accomplishment) take this account from the Lovers themselves of this Treason at Edinburgh. The greatest want they had was of Beer, but as for Oatmeal, Butter, Fresh-water, and Salt meat, they had enough, the Master Gunner told me, that when our Guns were a drawing to the Batteries, he had so placed his Pieces, that ours could not possibly have been planted without great losse, but when he prepared to give fire, he was forbidden by the Governour upon pain of Death. His man Abernethy went often out of the Castle, upon pretence of getting Intelligence, (but it was to hold it with Cromwel) sure it is, that Dundals and he and some others were a little wiser, and went not over the water as they had made Conditions, some of those that did being imprisoned (the Court and Camp being sadly affected with this loss) the Provost of Edinburgh, Sir James Stuart is in Town, but keeps private, lest the Wives in the Street should should abuse him' as they did Straughan and Ker at their coming hither; the Lord Warreston who came (as he pretended) for the Records, is not yet returned, but staves in Town, for he cares not to go back: He and the rest of that Remonstrant Tribe are summoned to come to Parliament, Col. Dundas, Straughan, and Capto Giffan, with Abernethy, Swinton, and Andrews, were else to be excommunicated and declared Traytors, which was done Jan. 14. Mr. James Guthry, and the Earl of Lothian, and Gen. Holborn, were generally suspected, with Sir John Chiesly, who are every day expected in our quarters; Rutherford, and Gillespy are likewise Dissenters from the present manage of Affairs. — Ker saith, his wound on his right hand is Gods justice against him, for lifting it up against us in such a cause as he maintained. And so I will conclude all those treasonable practices, and fomented divisions of that Nation against their common interest by this Master of all Treacherous Arts.

Cromwel was again very earnest and intent upon making or finding a way by Sterling, and therefore on the 8. of February he marched thither again, having been informed of some Fords thereabouts where he might pass his Army, or at least impede their raising new Forces, and way-lay their marching into England, which was given out as the grand design, a Force being left on that side the Water, sufficient to sustain any Impression of the English; and to that expedition Duke Hamilton, Duke of Buckingham, Lord Cleveland, Wentworth, Wilmot, and Col. Massey who had a noble and full Regiment, and was to be Major General, with the noble and most Loyal Capt. Titus and Col. Graves were designed. Cromwel as was said, to this purpose, in very tempestuous weather reached his his intended passes, but found the approaches to them so boggy and unpassable, that in the same stress of weather, his Army half spoiled with cold, and other discommodities, he was forced to retire again as he had done twice before, (having only alarmed the Scots, and put them into a sudden posture of defence) to Glasgow, and to await the time of his Boats Arrival and a happier season of the year.

This was the Seat of Rebellion in that Kingdom, and very fit for his Head Quarters, and University also; which remembers me that Cromwel a little while before was chosen Chancellor of Oxford, & honored hereabouts with the publick Seal thereof on purpose to stave off the rapinous sacrilegious hands of the Parliam. who were a hammering upon an Act for the Sale of Colledge-Lands, to carry on their Wars; and Crom. did (as was well projected) undertake their preservation, and did express some angry resentment at the Parliament for this Barbarity, laying his hand as usual upon his Sword; moreover he did promise to defend and maintain them against all such base and wicked Attempts by whomsoever, & that not without a menace to the Authority should design it, against whom he was very ready and willing to provide himself of Crimes, Accusations, and such notorious and invidious Complaints: besides that it made the University a sure friend to him, which was as considerable as half the Kingdom. And this was a borrowed Policy practiced by all the disputed rights and Titles to the Crown. There was this remarkable, that the Delegates of the University declared not their main design till they had given him his Oath as Chancellor, which was thought of little security, but only that the solemnity of it might the better

ter mind him to whom he had given it. Hence after some debates and publick disputes with the Ministers viz. Gillespy, Rutherford, &c. of Glasgow aforesaid, concerning the lawfulness of this Invasion, which he performed (as he said) in much weakness of (both Argument and) body, seeing there was no drawing the Scot out that way to fight, which way they intended for an undisturbed March, marched back to Edinburgh by the beginning of May (and in his way burned down the Lady Kilfishes house, for holding Intelligence with the King) having notice of the Arrival of his Boats at Leith, for the transportation of his Army into Fife, which was the last remedy; the failure of Victuals in the Scotch Camp, which therefore they should be forced to abandon and march, proving a meer delusion.

Cromwel being at Edinburgh, having notice how the King lay encamped at Sterling, Leshly's Foot quartering on the Southside, and Middleton on the North-side of the Park, encompassed with a stone Wall; and that abundance of Provision was brought in daily, supposing they would march; drew all his remaining forces out of the West with as much care and conduct as could be, and encamped likewise in the Fields by Edinburgh in a readinesse for them, whether to march or fight: But in the mean time, he was taken very ill of his Ague; so that Dr. Wright, and Dr. Bates, two eminent Physitians, were sent down to attend his Cure, and many blith and anxious discourses were made concerning his death, as either party wished, for he was brought very low; but being recovered to some degree of health by these Gentlemen, it was presently sounded like a Proclamation; and I have therefore thought fit to transcribe

a piece of the Letter, that the world may see what queer Hypocrites his Attendants, like himself and his Times, were by the pious nonsense and most blasphemous flattery of this Apocrypha Epistle. If I knew the Secretary or Inditer, I would record him for his Pen,———Truly Sir, his Life and Health are exceeding precious, and I account it every day a greater mercy than other that we have his Life, observing that every dispensation of God draws him nearer to himself, and makes him more heavenly and holy, and by consequence more useful for his Generation, in the management of that power, which God hath committed to him, &c.

This Occasion of his sickness minds me of one passage of his Life, wherein was a Ray or Specimen of his Humanity. He had a Servant a Frenchman, one Drury, that attended him in his Chamber, whom of all his Retainers he best loved, and would hardly brook his absence out of his sight, whether for that he could more freely communicate his Privacies to a Forraigner, who was altogether unconcerned in them, and therefore of a greater secrecie and confidence; or for his diligence and care of his Person, set off with his national fondnesses, and insinuations: This fellow dying not long after, Cromwel did passionately grieve thereat, and for the memory of this his dear Servant, made ample Provisions by a Pension for his Relations, which continued during his Usurpation. At last with much ado by the helps of Physick, and the especial constant attendance of those Doctors sent him, and charged with his preservation by the Parliament; Cromwel fully revived to theirs (afterwards) as well as the Kingdoms sorrow.

The English Army in Scotland was now in motion

for

for grass, and marched upon their old design of Sterling to Newbridge, so to Lithgow, from whose Castle Battlements, they might espy the Tents of the Scotch Army encamped in Torwood four miles of this side Sterling, (whither his Creature Warreston was now summoned by the Commissioners of the Assembly peremptorily by the third of July) having cast up a regular and well fortified line with Bulwarks mounted with Guns, and having a River behind them, which they might passe at pleasure; in this posture they awaited the English, who coming up and facing them on the third of July, in the night following the Scots drew up their Cannon, and planted them on the brow of the Hill, and next morning saluted Cromwel with 50. great Guns, but with little Execution; which made him quickly draw out of shot, and give over his once begun resolution of attacking them at so much disadvantage. The English therefore marched back again, Ma. General Lambert being sent from Glasgow a week after to view the passes, which he reported by reason of the boggy approaches there, to be very hazardous. Upon their departure from Lithgow, to Glasgow, the Scots removed from Torwood, and encamped at Kilfith, a place environed with insuperable defences, having a Bog on one hand, and craggy Mountains on the other; but the English Army (having eaten up all at Glasgow and those parts, and trod down the Corn standing, that the Scots might find no sustenance that way, if they should march) appearing and marching with great noise, on the other side, they imagining the English meant to clap in between them and Sterling, hastened back again to their old line at Torwood, July, 13. whither Cromwel followed, and to provoke them to an Engagement

gement, stormed Calender-house in their view, and put all the Defendants, except the Governour, to the Sword, and then seeing there was no possibility of fighting with them, but that they were resolved to keep them in play, till Winters scarcity of Horsemeat should make them give over and depart the Kingdom, he encamped himself, awaiting the success of his design by Boat into Fife.

While Cromwel thus attended the Scots at Torwood, within a mile and a half of them at Falkirk, at length the long expected successe of a transportation into Fife manifested it self: for Col. Overton with 1400. Foot of his own, and Col. Daniels Regiment, with four Troops of Horse of Col. Lydcots, having with the loss of a few men gained a place called North-ferry on the other side the Frith, on the 17. of July, had as the time served intrenched themselves; and before the Scotch Army then beyond Sterling, could reach them with a sufficient force to drive them out, Major G. Lambert was passed over to them, it being an Arm of the Sea, and had defeated Sir John Brown with 4000. men; the success and great consequence of which, and the said transportation, I will briefly sum up in Cromwels Letter.

In pursuance of the providence of God, and that blessing lately given to your Forces in Fife, and finding that the Enemy being Masters of the Pass at Sterling, could not be gotten out there without hindering his Provisions at St. Johnstons, we by general advise thought fit to attempt Saint Johnstons, knowing that that would necessitate him to quit his pass; wherefore leaving with Major Gen. Harrison about 3000. Horse and Dragoons, besides those which are with Col. Rich, Rich. Col. Saunders, and Col. Barton, upon the Borders, we marched to St. Johnstons, and lying one day before it, we had it surrendred to us; during which time we had some intelligence of the Enemies marching Southward, though with some contradiction, as if it had not been so; but doubting it might be true, leaving a Garrison in St. Johnstons, and sending L. Gen. Monck with 5, or 6000. men to Sterling to reduce that place, and by it to put your affairs into a good posture in Scotland: We marched with all possible expedition back again, and have passed our Foot and many of our Horse over the Frith this day, resolving to make what speed we can up to the Enemy; who in this desperation and fear and out of inevitable necessity is run to try what he can do this way. I do apprehend that if he goes for England, being some few daies march before us, it will trouble some mens thoughts, and may occasion some inconveniences, of which I hope we are as deeply sensible, and have, and I trust shall be as diligent to prevent as any; and indeed this is our comfort, that in simplicity of heart as to God, we have done to the best of our Judgments, knowing that if some issue were not put to this businesse, it would occasion another Winters War to the ruine of your Soldiery, for whom the Winter-difficulties of this Country; are too hard, and be under the endless expence of the Treasure of England, in prosecuting this War.

It may be supposed we might have kept the Enemy from this, by interposing between him and England, which truly I believe I might, but how to remove him out of this place without doing what we have done, unlesse we had had a commanding Army on both sides the River of Frith, is not clear to us, or how to answer the inconveniences aforementioned we understand not;

we pray therefore, that seeing there is a possibility for the Enemy to put you to some trouble, you would with the same courage (grounded upon a confidence in God) wherein you have been supported to the great things in which God hath used you heretofore, improve the best you can, such Forces as you have in readinesse, or may on the sudden be got together to give the Enemy some check, untill we shall be able to reach up to him, which we trust in the Lord we shall do our utmost endeavour in; and indeed we have this comfortable experiment from the Lord, that this Enemy is heart-smitten by God, and when ever the Lord shall bring us up to them, we believe the Lord will make the desperateness of this Counsel of theirs to appear, and the folly of it also; when England was much more unsteady than now, and when a much more considerable Army of theirs unfoiled invaded you, and we had but weak force to make resistance at Preston, upon deliberate advice, we chose rather to put our selves between their Army and Scotland, and how God succeeded that is not well to be forgotten.

This is not out of choice on our part, but by some kind of necessity, and it is to be hoped will have the like issue, together with a hopeful end of your work, in which it's good to wait upon the Lord, upon the earnest of former experiences, and hope of his presence, which only is the Life of your Cause. Major Gen. Harrison, with the Horse and Dragoons under him, and Colonel Rich and the rest in those parts, shall attend the motion of the Enemy, and endeavour the keeping of them together, as also to impede his March, and will be ready to be in conjunction with what Forces he shall get together for this Service, to whom Orders have been speeded to that purpose, as this enclosed to Major General

General Harrison will shew. Major General Lambert this day marched with a very considerable Body of Horse up towards the Enemies Reer; with the rest of the Horse and nine Regiments of Foot (most of them of your old Foot and Horse) I am hastning up and shall, by the Lords help, use the utmost diligence: I hope I have left a Commanding Force under Lieutenant General Monck in Scotland. This account I thought my duty to speed to you, and rest

Leith, 4 August
1651.

Your most humble Servant
O. Cromwel.

This shews what sudden troubled apprehensions He had of this well designed March of the Kings, and made him repent his obstinacy of Honour in reducing St. Johnstons, by which the King got three days march of him: but however he excused this to the Parliament (who were almost in despair, and terribly affrighted at the News of it) yet they did highly tax him for his negligence even to suspicion, and spoke ill words of him, which came to his ears, and for which he soon after cryed quits with them.

The King departed from Sterling the last of July, and came into England by the way of Carlisle, and upon his first footing there was Proclaimed rightful King of Great Britain, and did thereupon publish his Declaration, wherein He offered his free Grace and Pardon (to be confirmed by an Act thereafter) to all his Subjects of England, of what ever nature or crime their offences were, excepting Cromwel, Bradshaw, and Cook, the more immediate principal murderers of His Father; and therewith prosecuted his march, being proclaimed in the same manner through all the Towns he passed. On

On the 22. of August, the Van of the Kings Army entred Worcester, some resistance being attempted to be made by some new raised Forces under one Coll. James, and by the influence of Baron Wild, but the Townsmen saved them the labour of driving them out, and most joyfully welcomed these weary Guests and such too as in 1645, had been extremely oppressive and intolerably burdensome at the Siege of Hereford; but their gladness at the Kings presence, and hope of his Restitution, obliterated all other considerations and remembrances whatsoever. The Mayor and his Brethren at the Kings Intrado did Him the customary but most chearful obeysances, rendring him the Keys and Mace upon their Knees, and bidding him and his Forces welcome to this his Majesties Ancient and Loyal City, where the same day with great solemnity he was anew proclaimed, and the tired Soldiers most abundantly provided for, being in all Scotch and English some 13000. who had marched 300. miles outright in three weeks.

In the meantime the Parliament had amassed a numerous Militia in all the Counties of England: and glad were the Members that the King stayed for them, for nothing was more dreaded then his continued march to London, which place would have soon ridded their fears, upon an approach of the Kings Army but 30. miles further from Worcester: but to prevent that, as Essex did before at the beginning of the War (whose first efforts took this way) Cromwel by long Marches through New-castle, Rippon, Ferrybrygs, Doncaster, Mansfield, and Coventry, had interposed himself, and joyned with his Army at Keynton, where a General Council of all his Officers was held, and a speedy advance to Worcester resolved on, Lieutenant General Fleetwood being dispatched to bring up his Forces, then on their way at Banbury, the gross of a l the Forces amounting to above 50000. effective, Militia and all.

By this time Cromwel had surrounded the City of Worcester with his spreading Host, in as near a compass as the Rivers and Passes would suffer him, the Kings Army as yet lying out of the Town a mile in the fields. The first passe endeavoured to be taken, was Upton-Bridge on Fleetwood's side, which Major Gen. Lambert attempted with 500. Horse and Dragoons, who unespied crept upon their Bellies on a piece of Timber they had laid over the River, which the surprizing Assailants after a brisk dispute wrestled from Col. Massey. The Scots having thus abandoned the place, it was presently possessed by a strong Party of Horse and Foot, in order to the present advance of the rest of the Army.

The Scots now drawn closer to Worcester made many Salleys, breaking down 2. or 3. Bridges over the River Team, and shewing a well ordered and governed courage; but Septemb. 3. that ominous day, he drew out from his own Post and (having given the signal to the whole Army to fall on) began the Fight in this manner.

Cromwel himself in person (about 3 a Clock with his Life-Guard and Col. Hacker's Regiment of Horse, with part of his own Regiment, and Col. Ingholdsby's, and Fairfax's entire) passed over his Bridge of Boats upon the Severn, and marched towards the City; after him, L. G. Fleetwood, who had been most part of that day marching of 5 miles from Upton to Powisk-Bridge, which the Kings Army had broken down, passed with Col. Goff's and Maj. Gen. Dean's Dean's Regiments, and joyn'tly advanced, the Kings Forces encountring them at the Hedges, and disputing every field with them, in such order and with such gallantry, that these already over (lest they should not wholly be discouraged with the hotness of the service) were relieved by reserves, and they by others, no considerable progress yet made, the Highlanders proving excellent Firemen, and coming to the But-end at every foot, till weary, and their Ammunition spent, the King, being then upon the place, Commanded them in some haste into the City, and halted himself to the other side; where Col. Hayne's Regiment, with Cobbets stood about Powick-Bridge, and were entertained with no lesse Manhood and Slaughter: and though Col. Matthews was the reserve to the other 2 Regiments, yet the Scotch Foot fairly drove them from their ground, till their little Army being every way engaged, and no seconds or supplies to be expected, after some wheelings in a carelesse regard of the Enemy, as if they feared not to make which way they pleased, they drew likewise into the Town, as did that Brigade which opposed the Regiments of the Lord Gray, Col. Blague, Gibbons, and Marsh.

But they stayed not long here, for as if their spent spirits had broke out with greater fury, they sallied out in great bodies upon Cromwell's post, who had now brought the Militia forces into play, the Veterans wisely detaching to engage first upon the storm which was then intended, but there was yet field matter enough to do. In the head of one of those Squadrons, the King himself charged with that gallantry which would have become our Admiration in other men, and shewed he had not forgot the Discipline of War, in which he had been brought up in his youth; In one of those charges he made, Duke Hamilton a better Soldier, and nobler gallanter person than his Brother, received a shot on his Thigh, whereof presently after he dyed. The loss that way sustained by the Enemy fell principally upon the Essex Foot, and those of Cheshire and Surrey, who returned in thin Troops and Companies to their Counties; but fresh and entire Brigades and Regiments, in Reserves, namely Desboroughs Regiment of Horse, Cromwel's of Horse, M.G. Lambert's of Horse, Whaley's Harrison's and Tomlinson's Brigades, with other foot reinforcing them; the Scots by the overpowering multitude were driven into the Town, Leshley with 2000 Horse (upon what account not known) not stirring out of the Town to relieve them, when the Enemy entred pel mel with them, and gained the Fort Royal about 7 a Clock at night, about which time the King left the Town, it being dark, and accompanied with some 60 Horse of the chiefest and most confident of his Retinue, though many more pressed to bear him Company, departed out of St. Martins-gate, and it was reported that Cobbet very narrowly Mist him, as the King left his Lodging, whither he first hastned.

The Enemies Foot was now got into the Town, and according to their Order fell a plundering the Town in a most barbarous manner, as if Turks were again Sacking of Constantinople, and giving no quarter to any they found in the Streets: through this their greediness of spoil, they kept the Horse out lest they should have shared the better part, and to that purpose kept the Gates fast as they were, and so favoured (as God would have it) the Kings escape, some Scots who had got into one of the Churches held out till next morning, when they obtained quarter for Life, by which time there was not an Inhabitant in Worcester, friend or foe, left worth a farthing; but the Loyal Inhabitants lost little by the Bargain, being supplied with fresh wares to their desires from London, without a scruple of credit or payment, and their Debts forborn till such time as God should enable them, which the Gentry and Inhabitants round about them endeavoured to bring to pass, by their more than ordinary resort to that Market, for all necessaries and upon all occasions. The Mayor (being Knighted by the King) and Aldermen were committed to Prison, and the Wife of one Guyes (who for betraying the designs of the King in that Garrison was hanged) was rewarded with 200 l. per annum, and 200 l. down.

There were slain in the field and in Town (in the last the most) and in pursuit some 3000. and some 8000. taken prisoners in several places, most of the English escaping by their Shiboleth, the principal were Duke Hamilton (who presently dyed of his wounds) and at Newport the Earl of Lauderdale, Earl of Rothes, Earl of Carnworth, Earl of Kelly, Earl of Derby, Earl of Cleveland, the now Earl of Shrewsbury, Sir John Packington, the Lord Spyne, Sir Ralph Clare Sir Charles Cunningham; Col. Graves, Mr. Richard Fanshawe Secretary to the King, 6 Col. of Horse, 13 of Foot, 9 Lieut. Col. of Horse, 8. Leut. Col. of Foot, 6 Majors of Horse, 13 Majors of Foot, 37 Captains of Horse, 72 Captains of Foot, 55 Quartermasters, 89 Lieutenants; there were some General Officers, with 76 Cornets of Horse, 99 Ensigns of Foot, 90 Quartermasters, 80 of the Kings Servants, with the Kings Standard which he had set up when he summoned the Country, the Kings Coach and Horses, and Collar of SS. but that which was Ten times more then all (the Kings person) they had no power to touch.

On the 12. of Sept. Cromwel came to London, and was met about Alton with the Speaker and the Members, and the Lord Mayor and the Recorder Steel, who in a set Speech congratulated his great Successer, and like a false Prophet, by a mistaken Prolepsis applyed these words of the Psalmist, — To bind their Kings in Chains, and their Nobles in Fetters of Iron, in an arrogant Exaltation of his Atchievements: Next day the common Prisoners (being driven like a Herd of Swine) were brought through Westminster into Tutthil fields, (a sadder Spectacle was never seen, except the miserable place of their defeat) and there sold to several Merchants, and sent to Barbadoes: the Colours taken were likewise set up in Westminster-hall, with those taken before at Preston and Dunbar.

He had now passed and surmounted all the difficulties and troubles that the Interest of the Crown hitherto threatned, and nothing was wanting to the Completion of his Aims, but the Kings person, most miraculously preserved and rescued, to the perpetual disquiet and vexation of this Would-be-Monarch. But because that sacred story ought not to be blasphemed with the impiety of his, I will not mingle any of those blessed Providences of his Escape, with the direful designments of Cromwel's unobstructed passage to the Throne.

For having superated all outward appearances of danger to his ultimate design, there remained nothing but a wretched and hated Junctio of men with whom whom he was next to grapple; things so slighted by him, and their Authority so scorned after this discomfiture of the King, that he never vouchsafed them a good look, nay publicly express'd his resentments of their saucy expostulations of his conduct about the Kings march for England, which was mentioned before.

And therefore at his first coming into the House, (where he was entertained by the Speaker, with the second part of Steel's Panegyrick) a motion was started for a new Representative, and all the Codlings and Embryo's of Triples and Newmarket-beaths Engagements afresh resumed, and those Army expedients for which so many Levellers had suffered now again revived, acknowledged, and applauded for the only conducing means to the long expected settlement.

The main whereof was the Proposal of a new Representative to be equally chosen to succeed the present Parliament. A most abominated and deprecared evil by the members, who having done so much mischief, and incurred so much derestation for practising his and their mutual designs upon the best Government and the most incomparable Prince in the world, were almost at their wits end with madness at his, and invention of their (contra) devices.

While these things were debating amongst them, and every day produced some fresh altercation and quarrel about dissolving this and choosing of a new Representative, which the Soldiers not only from their former principles English Freemen, but now as the Generals Janizaries, and in obedience to his dictates and commands, with the pretensory advice of his Council of Officers unanimously and readily urged,

ged, (for he had brought the Army to his Bow, and disciplined them to a most exact ignorant devotion and obedience to his Service during the Scotch War, where the distance of the Commonwealth-men could not reach) his second self his Son in Law Ireton died in Ireland, just as he was coming to the fruition of those grand projections they had both conspired. He had employed his Vice-government after Cromwel's departure in reducing places held for the King, there being no field Service ever after.

He survived not the total Conquest of Ireland, to which he was by compact and Oliver's Bull decreed; but saw a very fair prospect thereof in the rendition of Limrick and the expected delivery of Galloway; and since this concerned Cromwel and the Agreement between them (which is most certain though none of those secret compacts are discoverable) I will give the Reader his Character, and this short account of his decease here.

Limrick being taken, Ireton marched to joyn with Sir Charles Coote to attempt something further; and together took in Claro Castle, but the weather not proving so seasonable, and the Soldiers tired with duty at the Siege of Limrick, they parted into winter Quarters; Ireton back again to Limrick, in the way whither he fell sick on the 15. of November, and after purging and bleeding, and others means used, died of the Plague in that City on the 17. of the same month, the Commissioners for the Parliament, there substituting to his command in the Army (while the Parliament or General for Cromwel was lately so made of Ireland) should otherwise appoint) Edmond Ludlow the Lieutenant General of the Army in that Kingdome. On the 17. of December his Coffin cashe was landed at Bristol, and pompously dismiss'd to London, where it was for a time in State at Somerset-House, all hung with black, and a Scutcheon over the Gate with this Motto, Dulce est pro patria mori, how futable, that Countryman best told who Englished it in these words, it is good for his Country that he is dead: on Feb. 6. following he was interred in H. 7. Chappel (being carried out with a pompous Funeral, at which Cromwel was chief Mourner, and the Members of the Juncto attendants in black with a great deal of State) but hath since found a fitter repository for his accursed dust. It was believed by the Army who did credit their own conjectures and others Impostures for want of literature, that he was a perfect Commonwealths-man, and would have withstood his Father in Law in his ambitious intrusions upon the Parliament, and this because he was the Drawer or Promoter of all the Levelling Fundamentals, but he prevented their riper and truer judgment by appearing to a greater and most exact Tribunal, and perished with rottenesse in the maturity of his, and this his Compeers design.

He was absolutely the best Prayer-maker and Preacher in the Army, for which he may thank his Education at Oxford, though Oliver came but little behind him, being very frequent and instant, now especially, in such devotions, out of all season and reason, but it was all one to the Soldiers who had nothing else to do but to Prey and to Pray. The other qualities and conditions of Ireton were so congenial with Olivers, that in the prosecution of his story I shall but tell the same things, the evil spirit after his decease being doubled upon him by a mischievous Metempsychosis, a transmigration of soul, which assimilated ged, (for he had brought the Army to his Bow, and disciplined them to a most exact ignorant devotion and obedience to his Service during the

where the distance of the Com not reach) his second self his in Ireland, just as he was com those grand projections they had employed his Vice-gover departure in reducing places being no field Service ever aft

He survived not the total C which he was by compact and but saw a very fair prospect of of Limrick and the expected and since this concerned Cromwell ment between them (which is none of those secret compacts will give the Reader his Charad count of his decease here.

Limrick being taken, Ireton with Sir Charles Coote to attempt and together took in Clare Castle, but the weather not proving so seasonable, and the Soldiers tired with duty at the Siege of Limrick, they parted into winter Quarters; Ireton back again to Limrick, in the way whither he fell sick on the 15. of November, and after purging and bleeding, and others means used, died of the Plague in that City on the 27. of the same month, the Commissioners for the Parliament, there substituting to his command in the Army (while the Parliament for General Y for Cromwell was lately so made of Ireland) should otherwise appoint) Edward London the Lieutenant General of the Army in that Kingdome. On the 17. of December his Cat-
casse

FOXING AN

MAKES.

PAGES A

IN T

casſe was landed at Briſtol, and pompouſly diſmiſs'd to London, where it was for a time in State at Som-

Scutcheon
pro patriâ told who his Country was interred
a pompous urner, and in black found a fitas believed conjectures ture, that he would have cious intruuſe he was ling Fundauer judgexact Tri-

AND. BAD. PRINT
ES. SEVERAL
APPEAR BLURRED
THIS BOOK.

and perished with extreme immaturity of his, and this his Compeers design.

He was absolutely the best Prayer-maker and Preacher in the Army, for which he may thank his Education at Oxford; though Oliver came but little behind him, being very frequent and instant, now especially, in such devotions, out of all season and reason, but it was all one to the Soldiers who had no thing else to do but to Prey and to Pray. The other qualities and conditions of Ireton were so congenial with Olivers, that in the prosecution of his story I shall but tell the same things, the evil spirit after his decease being doubled upon him by a mischievous Metempsychosis, a transmigration of soul, which assimilated

ged, (for he had brought the Army to his Bow, and disciplined them to a most exact ignorant devotion and obedience to his Service during the Scotch War, where the distance of the Commonwealth-men could not reach) his second self his Son in Law Ireton died in Ireland, just as he was coming to the fruition of those grand projections they had both conspired. He had employed his Vice-government after Cromwel's departure in reducing places held for the King, there being no field Service ever after.

He survived not the total Conquest of Ireland, to which he was by compact and Oliver's Bull decreed; but saw a very fair prospect thereof in the rendition of Limrick and the expected delivery of Galloway; and since this concerned Cromwel and the Agreement between them (which is most certain though none of those secret compacts are discoverable) I will give the Reader his Character, and this short account of his decease here.

Limrick being taken, Ireton marched to joyn with Sir Charles Cook to attempt something further; and together took in Clare Castle, but the weather not proving so seasonable, and the Soldiers tired with duty at the Siege of Limrick, they parted into winter Quarters; Ireton back again to Limrick, in the way whither he fell sick on the 15. of November, and after purging and bleeding, and others means used, died of the Plague in that City on the 27. of the same month, the Commissioners for the Parliament, there substituting to his command in the Army (while the Parliament or General for Cromwel was lately so made of Ireland) should otherwise appoint) Edward Ludlow the Lieutenant General of the Army in that Kingdome. On the 17. of December his Carcasse casſe was landed at Bristol, and pompouſly diſmiſs'd to London, where it was for a time in State at Somerſet-Houſe, all hung with black, and a Scutcheon over the Gate with this Motto, Dulce eſt pro patriâ mori, how ſutable, that Countryman beſt told who Engliſhed it in theſe words, it is good for his Country that he is dead: on Feb. 6. following he was interred in H. 7. Chappel (being carried out with a pompous Funeral, at which Cromwel was chief Mourner, and the Members of the Juncto attendants in black with a great deal of State) but hath ſince found a fitter repository for his accuſed duſt. It was believed by the Army who did credit their own conjectures and others Impoſtures for want of literature, that he was a perfect Commonwealths-man, and would have withſtood his Father in Law in his ambitious intruſions upon the Parliament, and this becauſe he was the Drawer or Promoter of all the Levelling Fundamentals, but he prevented their riper and truer judgment by appearing to a greater and moſt exact Tribunal, and periſhed with rottenneſſe in the maturity of his, and this his *Compeer*s deſign.

He was abſolutely the beſt Prayer-maker and Preacher in the Army, for which he may thank his Education at Oxford, though Oliver came but little behind him, being very frequent and inſtant, now eſpecially, in ſuch devotions, out of all ſeaſon and reaſon, but it was all one to the Soldiers who had nothing elſe to do but to Prey and to Pray. The other qualities and conditions of Ireton were ſo congenial with Olivers, that in the proſecution of his ſtory I ſhall but tell the ſame things, the evil ſpirit after his deceaſe being doubled upon him by a miſchievous Metempeſychosis, a tranſmigration of ſoul, which aſſimi-

lated their Ashes in the same grave at Tyburn.

The fortune of this grand atchievement at Worcester, had subjugated all the Dominions of the English Sovereignty entirely under the power of the Free-States, the Isles of Scilly, Man, Barbadoes, and Christophers, submitting and acknowledging their jurisdiction, all which were reckoned by Cromwell but the Trophies due to his valour and the reward of his labour. And therefore all things thus flattering his conceits of Majesty, He was angry with himself for permitting those delays to his eager Ambition, now complemented, smoothed and tyred by many fine and pretty Evasions of the Members, who wanted not most just pretenses to detain the Government from his handling; but of this presently.

There was another thing in his eye which troubled him most of all, and respite'd and superseded his design upon the Rump, which was the Illustrious D. of Gloucester then a Prisoner at Carisbrook Castle, the Prison of his Father and the Custody of himself; so long therefore as that Prince should continue here he could not expect that a single person could be opposed to his right, without manifest danger from all parties, who to be revenged of their injuries would rather comply with the Royal Family than suffer his bold Usurpation. Therefore to quit himself of that Fear, he procured by his Party in the Parliament (who were resolved to dispose of him here in some ordinary profession, to make Majesty more contemptible in the sight of Men) that for the lessening the Charge of the Common-wealth, the said Duke should be transported into some place beyond Sea, with a promised Exhibition of some scorned Pension.

The

The Noble Duke being accordingly removed to the great content and joy of his relations, who dreaded his Murther, and the satisfaction of Cromwell who was Gorged with his Royal Fathers, another danger returned from beyond Sea in exchange of that exported: for the Dutch gave manifest Symptoms of a Rupture with this new Common-wealth, whose insolent depredations at sea had molested and greatly diminished their Trade, and braved them to a revenge, upon a pique taken from their rejecting their offers of a Treaty and Amity, and suffering their Ambassadors St. John and Strickland to be affronted at the Hague, while the Affairs of the King in Scotland were yet in suspense.

It was therefore a hazardous Enterprize to be fighting with two Common-wealths together, and to which his confidence and Resolution could not raise him, without a surer interest in the people, who were to undergoe his Tyranny. This now reprieved the Members from his Decree of Dissolution, while they had tryed the fortune of war with the Dutch, and had put things into such a posture and certainty, that no home alteration could discompose or disorder it, the Treasures for the support of the War, being now a filling, a Naval force rigging and equipping, and the Honour and glory of the Nation engaged and concerned. Thus far he cast his Eyes to foreign Transactions, leaving the intestine dangers to the Juncto's desperation, for,

At home the Parliament had a greater mischief breeding against them than they feared from the most dangerous of their foreign Enemies. A dangerous imposture of ambition, whose quabbing-beating pains gave them no rest, nor could all their skill tell

ged, (for he had brought the Army to his Bow, and disciplined them to a most exact ignorant devotion and obedience to his Service during the Scotch War, where the distance of the Commonwealth-men could not reach) his second self his Son in Law Ireton died in Ireland, just as he was coming to the fruition of those grand projections they had both conspired. He had employed his Vice-government after Cromwel's departure in reducing places held for the King, there being no field Service ever after.

He survived not the total Conquest of Ireland; to which he was by compact and Oliver's Bull decreed, but saw a very fair prospect thereof in the rendition of Limrick and the expected delivery of Galloway; and since this concerned Cromwel and the Agreement between them (which is most certain though none of those secret compacts are discoverable) I will give the Reader his Character, and this short account of his decease here.

Limrick being taken, Ireton marched to join with Sir Charles Coote to attempt something further, and together took in Claro Castle, but the weather not proving so seasonable, and the Soldiers tired with duty at the Siege of Limrick, they parted into winter Quarters; Ireton back again to Limrick; in the way whither he fell sick on the 15. of November, and after purging and bleeding, and others means used, died of the Plague in that City on the 27. of the same month; the Commissioners for the Parliament, there substituting to his command in the Army (while the Parliament or General for Cromwel was lately so made of Ireland) should otherwise appoint) Edmund Ludlow the Lieutenant General of the Army in that Kingdome. On the 17. of December his Carcasſe was landed at Briſtol, and pompouſly diſmiſſ'd to London, where it was for a time in State at Sommerſet-Houſe, all hung with black, and a Scutcheon over the Gate with this Motto, Dulce eſt pro patria mori, how ſutable, that Countryman beſt told who Engliſhed it in theſe words, it is good for his Country that he is dead: on Feb. 6. following he was interred in H. 7. Chappel (being carried out with a pompous Funeral, at which Cromwel was chief Mourner, and the Members of the Juncto attendants in black with a great deal of State) but hath ſince found a fitter repository for his accuſed duſt. It was believed by the Army who did credit their own conjectures and others Impoſtures for want of literature, that he was a perfect Commonwealths-man, and would have withſtood his Father in Law in his ambitious intruſions upon the Parliament, and this becauſe he was the Drawer or Promoter of all the Levelling Fundamentals, but he prevented their riper and truer judgments by appearing to a greater and moſt exact Tribunal, and periſhed with rottenneſſe in the maturity of his, and this his Compeers deſign.

casse

He was abſolutely the beſt Prayer-maker and Preacher in the Army, for which he may thank his Education at Oxford; though Oliver came but little behind him, being very frequent and inſtant, now eſpecially, in ſuch devotions, out of all ſeaſon and reaſon, but it was all one to the Soldiers who had no thing elſe to do but to Prey and to Pray. The other qualities and conditions of Ireton were ſo congenial with Olivers, that in the proſecution of his ſtory I ſhall but tell the ſame things, the evil ſpirit after his deceaſe being doubled upon him by a miſchievous Metemphychoſis, a tranſmigration of ſoul, which affimi-

lated their Ashes in the same grave at Tyburn.

The fortune of this grand atchievement at Worcester, had subjugated all the Dominions of the English Sovereignty entirely under the power of the Free-States, the Isles of Scilly, Man, Barbadoes, and Christophers, submitting and acknowledging their jurisdiction, all which were reckoned by Cromwel but the Trophies due to his valour and the reward of his labour. And therefore all things thus flattering his conceits of Majesty, He was angry with himself for permitting those delays to his eager Ambition, now complemented, smoothed and tyred by many fine and pretty Evasions of the Members, who wanted not most just pretenses to detain the Government from his handling; but of this presently.

There was another thing in his eye which troubled him most of all, and respited and superseded his design upon the Rump, which was the Illustrious D. of Gloucester then a Prisoner at Carisbrook Castle, the Prison of his Father and the Custody of himself; so long therefore as that Prince should continue here he could not expect that a single person could be opposed to his right, without manifest danger from all parties, who to be revenged of their injuries would rather comply with the Royal Family than suffer his bold Usurpation. Therefore to quit himself of that Fear, he procured by his Party in the Parliament (who were resolved to dispose of him here in some ordinary profession, to make Majesty more contemptible in the sight of Men) that for the lessening the Charge of the Common-wealth, the said Duke should be transported into some place beyond Sea, with a promised Exhibition of some scorned Pension.

The

The Noble Duke being accordingly removed to the great content and joy of his relations, who dreaded his Murther, and the satisfaction of Cromwell who was Gorged with his Royal Fathers, another danger returned from beyond Sea in exchange of that exported: for the Dutch gave manifest Symptoms of a Rupture with this new Common-wealth, whose insolent depredations at sea had molested and greatly damaged their Trade, and braved them to a revenge, upon a pique taken from their rejecting their offers of a Treaty and Amity, and suffering their Ambassadors St. John and Strickland to be affronted at the Hague, while the Affairs of the King in Scotland were yet in suspense.

It was therefore a hazardous Enterprize to be fighting with two Common-wealths together, and to which his confidence and Resolution could not raise him, without a surer interest in the people, who were to undergoe his Tyranny. This now reprieved the Members from his Decree of Dissolution, while they had tryed the fortune of war with the Dutch, and had put things into such a posture and certainty, that no home alteration could discompose or disorder it, the Treasures for the support of the War, being now a filling, a Naval force rigging and equipping, and the Honour and glory of the Nation engaged and concerned. Thus far he cast his Eyes to foreign Transactions, leaving the intestine dangers to the Juncto's desperation, for,

At home the Parliament had a greater mischief breeding against them than they feared from the most dangerous of their foreign Enemies. A dangerous imposture of ambition, whose quabbing-beating pains gave them no rest, nor could all their skill tell how to assuage or cure it. It swelled every day more and more in continual addresses, desires, petitions, declarations, till it came to be ripe, and then burst out to the destruction of this political body. This was the reiterated and inculcated story of the Parliaments providing for future equal representatives & putting a period to this, than which nothing could be more distastful, and of greater antipathy to the present Members, which yet they did most artfully conceal, & dissemble in a hundred complying Votes and Resolves even to the ascertaining of the longest day, November 5. 1654. for their sitting, but that was two years too long for Cromwel, whose fingers itched to be managing a Scepter. In order to this delay, the Committee that first sat and hatcht upon this bill were removed from the nest, and the addle eggs put under the chill incumbency of other wildfowl, & they to proceed therein with all expedition, a thing so unlikely, that Sultan Cromwel, who expected a grand Cairo brood, resolved not to be baffled much longer, as after a Fast and humiliation of him and his Council of Officers; and the Communication of the grounds thereof, to the whole Army in England and Ireland (which was a lamentation for the tedious continuance of self-interested persons in the Authority, and other Religious melancholy about charity, the want thereof was greatly bemoaned) we shall fully discover.

Every other day almost more Fasts, or some such religious Exercise was managed by Cromwel and Harrison, who mainly promoted the same Proposals for a new Representative, in order to the personal Raige of Christ, and that therefore it was high time the Government was placed in the Hands of his Saints, for all the glorious Prophecies thereof were now

now ready to be fulfilled : and this was cryed up as the Doctrine of the Times.

Cromwel seemed to be of the same judgment and of that Millenary Principle, designing (as he said) nothing in those Mutations of Government which were agitating, but in tendency to that great Revolution; so that he had absolutely fooled Harrison into a confidence of his good Intentions, and that he aimed not at his own greatness : and thereupon all the party Harrison could make, which was Peaks, Rogers, and Symptoms Congregations, were impatient to have the Parliament outed, and their fine module to take place, wherein Righteousness and Holiness should be exalted in the Kingdoms of the World. And now the Turk and the Pope were horribly threatned, and Oliver look'd upon as the great Instrument that should confound Antichrist.

But though most of the Officers were thus bewitched and besotted, yet a great many of them had just and strong suspicions what his dissolution of the Parliament would end in, and therefore secret consultations were held how to oppose these practices upon the Parliament ; in whose Authority conserved and secured, they were so wise as to think themselves safe and defended from the After-claps of the Rebellion: Among the rest, several Officers of note came voluntarily out of Ireland (as some out of Scotland) who had by their general Facts perceived the Drift of their General, to withstand him, and publicly protest against the conduct of this businesse, as directly tending to the overthrow and undoing all, for which so much blood had been spilt, and giving up the most glorious Cause in the World, to its vanquish'd Enemies ; No own Argument.

Major

Major General Lambert nevertheless did concur with him in every particular, the whole design being secretly imparted to him, and he promised as a reward for his Assistance, the succession to the Supreme power. This intimacy of Lambert was of a long standing ever since Preston-fight, and was cemented the faster by that complacency Oliver took in his Wife, A woman of good birth and good parts, and of pleasing attractions both for mind and body: The Voice of the people was, that she was more familiar with him than the honor of her Sex would allow, & that she had some extraordinary kindnesses for him which she had not for her husband; and that being the Medium or Reciprocation of Intelligence between them, she did communicate all her husbands designs, and conceal some of the others; though she needed not to have been so squeemish, or reserved for one, whose Depths were never fathomed or discovered to any one mortal, Ireton excepted. Of those that opposed him in the Design; Col. Venables, Scout-master-General Downing, and Maj. Streater, were the most eminent, who to that purpose, as abovesaid, came but of Ireland; but Col. Venables was soon wrought upon, and Mr. Downing offering to speak against it in the Council of Officers, and getting upon a Table for better Audience, was bid to come down by Cromwell, asking him what he did there? only Col. Streater persisted in his Resolution of giving Reasons against it, and being flamm'd by Harrison with Christs personal Raign, and that he was assured the Lord Gen. sought not himself, but that King Jesus might take the Scepter; He presently replied, That Christ must come before Christmas, or else he would come too late. For this opportune opposition, and 10. Queries then published lished by him in the Army, he was committed to the Gatehouse, and look'd upon by Cromwel as his Mortal Enemy.

The next Scene of this applauded Comedy was laid at the Cock-pit by Whitehal, where Cromwel concealing the number of the Beast in his Apocalypse, declared to his Council of Officers, That if they should trust the People in an Election of a new Parliament, according to the old Constitution, it would be a tempting of God, and that his confidence was, that God did intend to save and deliver this Nation by sen, as he had done in former times; and that five or six men, and some few more, setting themselves to the Work, might do more in one day, than the Parliament had or would do in a hundred, as far as he could perceive; and that such unbyassed men were like to be the only Instruments of the peoples happiness.

These things had been offered to be debated with a Committee, and a Treaty agreed, wherein so many Officers, and so many Members should meet, and argue the business, which signified only the crafty cunctation of the Parliament (who made Asses of the Sword-men) St. Johns being one of those Referrees, with other resty Sages of the Anarchy. By this means some 4 or 5. Months were spent upon the Definition of an equal Representative: But Cromwel growing teasty, some began to make particular Excuses, others to promise a new Representative to his mind, and some to side with the Equity of his Proposals, as most consistent, well advised, and prudential means, to the peace of the Nation; such a ridiculous collusion, that I cannot but anticipate the Event of this Conspiracy with this Truth.

Upon his return from the Dissolution of the Parliament

ament back again to the Council of Officers; He acquainted them of his Exploit, and then told them that now they must go hand in hand with him, and justifie what was done to the hazard of their Lives and Fortunes, as having advised and concurred in it: Adding, That when he went into the House, he intended not to do it; but the Spirit was so upon him, That he was over-ruled by it, and did not therefore consult with Flesh and Blood at all, nor did he premeditate the doing thereof, though he plainly saw the Parliament designed to spin an everlasting Thread. And because there are few good Acts of his Life, let the Reader score him up One, for the 23. of April 1653.

Oliver himself attended by Maj. Gen. Lambert, Harrison and some 8. more Officers, having after several conferences with their Committees (who shewed him the danger of calling a new Representative, as the Case then stood with the Commonwealth, for that no qualifications could sufficiently secure the interest thereof, and that the only way was to recruit the House which could judge of such Elections by their own Authority) received no satisfaction, entered the House, some Members being made privy to his design before, especially Sir Gilbert Pickering, who had held consultation the night before with him and was up armed in his chamber till the very time) and after a Speech therein shewing the reasons and necessity of that Dissolution, did declare it to be so, and required them to depart; saying in some passion to some of them who began to ask the reason of this, thou art a Whoremaster, thou a Drunkard, thou a Cheater of the publique; and presently Maj. Gen. Harrison peremptorily bid the Speaker leave the Chair; which he refused to do without the Order of the House, and till

till he was pulled out ; whereupon Harrison desired him to lend him his hand, and gently heaved him out; Cromwel also commanded that Bauble (as he called the Mace) to be taken away, and to be carried no more in State before him, and so having turned them out of Doors, lockt them up and clapt Guards before them, and about all the Avenues of the Palace, to keep these Spirits out from possessing it again.

The News of this Luciferian fall, was quickly spread throughout the City, and from thence into the Kingdom, being related and received with all imaginable gladness; while the Members slunk away, muttering to themselves the affront they had received, and laying their heads together how to retrieve themselves; for loth they were to suffer this violence, or acknowledge their Dissolution; which they would by no means hear of. But whatever they fancied to the contrary, raving at this boldness and audaciousness of their Servant, as they styled Cromwel, he minded it not, but went on in his work.

The Government (such as it was) was now lodged in the Council of Officers of his own making and preferring, and the first thing done by them after this new module, was the Emitting of a Declaration from him and his Officers, shewing the grounds and reasons of this Dissolution of the Parliament, with an account of their Intentions as to the present and future government of the Nation : which that it may appear by how slender a thread the Sword of this lawless Commander hung over the heads of those Parliament Tyrants, is very requisite to be inserted, it holding forth the present Intrigues of Cromwel's designs, and method of ambition.

Our intention is not to give an account at this time of the grounds, which first moved us to take up Arms, and engage our lives and all that was dear unto us, in this Cause; nor to mind in this Declaration the various Dispensations through which Divine Providence hath led us, or the witness the Lord hath born, and the many signal testimonies of acceptance the Lord hath given to the sincere endeavours of his unworthy Servants, whilst they were contesting with the many and great difficulties, as well in the Wars, as other transactions in the three Nations; being necessitated, for the defence of the same Cause they first asserted, to have recourse unto extraordinary actions; the same being evident by former Declarations published on that behalf.

After it had pleased God not only to reduce Ireland, and give in Scotland, but so marvellously to appear for his People at Worcester, that these Nations were reduced to a great degree of Peace, and England to perfect quiet; and thereby the Parliament had opportunity to give the People the harvest of their labour, blood and treasure, and to settle a due liberty both in reference to civil and spiritual things, whereunto they were obliged by their duty, their Engagements, as also the great and wonderful things which God had wrought for them; it was matter of much grief to the good and well-affected of the Land, to observe the little progress which was made therein, who thereupon applied to the Army expecting redress by their means; notwithstanding which, the Army, being unwilling to meddle with the Civil Authority in matters so properly appertaining to it, it was agreed, that his Excellency and Officers of the Army, which were Members of Parliament, should be desired to move the Parliament, to proceed vigorously in performing what was amiss in Government, and to the settling of the Commonwealth upon a foundation of justice and righteousness; which having done, we hoped that the Parlia-

Parliament would seasonably have answered our expectations: But finding (to our grief) delays therein, we renewed our desires in an humble Petition to them, which was presented in August last, and although they at that time signifying their good acceptance thereof returned us Thanks, and referred the particulars thereof to a Committee of the House, yet no considerable Effect was produced, nor any such progress made, as might imply their real intentions to accomplish what was Petitioned for; but on the contrary there more and more appeared amongst them, an aversion to the things themselves, with much bitterness and opposition to the People of God, and his Spirit acting in them: which grew so prevalent, that those persons of Honour and Integrity amongst them, who had eminently appeared for God and the publique good, both before and throughout this War, were rendered of no further use in Parliament, than by meeting with a corrupt party, to give them countenance to carry on their ends, and for effecting the desire they had of perpetuating themselves in the supreme Government. For which purpose the said party long opposed, and frequently declared themselves against having a new Representative; and when they saw themselves necessitated to take that Bill into consideration, they resolved to make use of it to recruit the House with persons of the same Spirit and temper, thereby to perpetuate their own sitting, which intention divers of the activest amongst them did manifest, labouring to persuade others to a consent therein: And the better to effect this, divers Petitions preparing from several Counties for the Continuance of this Parliament, were encouraged, if not set on foot by many of them.

For obviating these evils, the Officers of the Army, obtained several meetings with some of the Parliament, to consider what fitting means and remedy might be applied to prevent the same: lest that this Cause which the Lord hath so greatly blessed, and bore witness to, should languish and their hands, and by degrees, be wholly lost; and the Lives Liberties, and comforts of his People delivered into their Enemies hands.

All which being sadly and seriously considered by the honest people of this Nation, as well as by the Army, and wisdom and direction being sought from the Lord; it seemed to be a duty incumbent upon us, who had seen so much of the power and presence of God going along with us, to consider of some more effectual means, to secure the Cause, which the good People of this Commonwealth had been so long engaged in, and to establish Righteousness and Peace in these Nations.

And after much debate it was judged necessary, and agreed upon, that the Supreme Authority should be by the Parliament devolved upon known persons, men fearing God and of approved Integrity; and the Government of the Commonwealth committed unto them for a time, as the most hopeful way to encourage and countenance all Gods People, reform the Law, and administer Justice impartially; hoping thereby the People may forget Monarchy, and understanding their true Election of successive Parliaments, may have the Government settled upon a true Basis, without hazard to this glorious Cause, or necessitating to keep up Armies for the defence of the same.

And being still resolved to use all means possible to avoid extraordinary courses, we prevailed with about 20 Members of Parliament, to give us a Conference, with whom we freely and plainly debated the necessity and justice of our Proposals on that behalf; and did evidence that those, and not the Act under their Consideration, would most probably bring forth something answerable to that work, the foundation whereof God himself, hath laid, and is now carrying on in the world. The

The which notwithstanding found no acceptance, but instead thereof, it was offered, that the way was to continue still this present Parliament, as being that from which we might reasonably expect all good things. And this being vehemently insisted upon, did much confirm us in our apprehensions; That not any love to a Representative, but the making use thereof to recruit, and so to perpetuate themselves, was their aim.

They being plainly dealt with about this, and told, That neither the Nation, the honest Interest, nor we ourselves, would be deceived by such dealings, They did agree to meet again the next day in the Afternoon for mutual satisfaction, it being consented to by the Members present, that Endeavours should be used, that nothing in the mean time should be done in Parliament, that might exclude or frustrate the Proposals before-mentioned.

Notwithstanding this, the next morning the Parliament did make more hast than usual, in carrying on their said Act, being helped on therein by some of the persons engaged to us the night before, none of them which were then present endeavouring to oppose the same; and being ready to put the main Question for consummating the said Act, whereby our aforesaid Proposals would have been rendered void, and the way of bringing them into a fair and full Debate of Parliament obstructed.

For preventing whereof, and all the sad and evil consequences, which must upon the grounds aforesaid have ensued and whereby at one blow the Interest of all honest men, and of this glorious Cause, had been endangered to be laid in the dust, and these Nations embroiled in new Troubles at a Time when our Enemies abroad are watching all advantages against us, and some of them actually engaged in War with us; we have been necessitated, though with much reluctancy, to put an end to this Parliament; which

yet we have done (we hope) out of an honest heart, preferring this Cause above our names, lives, families, or interests, how dear soever; with clear intentions, and real purposes of heart, to call to the Government persons of approved fidelity and honesty: believing, That as none wise will expect to gather Grapes of Thorns, so good men will hope, that if persons so qualified be chosen, the fruits of a just and righteous Reformation, so long prayed and wished for, will (by the blessing of God) be in due time obtained, to the refreshing of all those good hearts, who have been panting after these things.

Much more might have been said if it had been our desire to justify our selves, by aspersing others, and raking into the Misgovernment of affairs; but we shall conclude with this, That as we have been led by necessity and Providence, to act as we have done, even beyond and above our own thoughts and desires; so we shall and do, in that of this great work which is behind, put our selves wholly upon the Lord for a blessing; professing we look not to stand one day without his support, much less to bring to pass one of the things mentioned and desired, without his assistance: And therefore do solemnly desire and expect, That all men, as they would not provoke the Lord to their own destruction, would wait for such issue as he should bring forth, and to follow their business with peaceable spirits; wherein we promise them protection by his assistance.

And for those who profess their fear and love to the Name of God; that seeing, in a great measure for their sakes, and for righteousness sake, we have taken our lives in our hands, to do these things, they would be instant with the Lord, day and night on our behalfs, that we may obtain grace from him. And seeing we have made so often Mention of his Name, that we may not do the least dishonour thereto: which indeed would be our confusion, and a stain to the whole profession of godliness.

We

We beseech them also to live in all humility, meekness, righteousness, and love one towards another, and towards all men; that so they may put to silence the ignorance of the foolish, who falsely accuse them; and to know that the late great and glorious dispensations, wherein the Lord hath so wonderfully appeared in bringing forth these things, by the travel and blood of his Children, ought so to oblige them, so to walk in the Wisdom and love of Christ, as may cause others to honour their holy Profession, because they see Christ to be in them of a truth.

We do further propose, before it be long, more particularly to shew the Grounds of our Proceedings, and the Reasons of this late great Action and Change, which in this We have but hinted at.

And we do lastly declare, That all Judges, Sheriffs, Justices of Peace, Mayors, Bailiffs, Committees, and all other Civil Officers, and Publick Ministers whatsoever, within the Commonwealth, or any parts thereof, do proceed in their respective Places, and Offices, and all persons whatsoever, are to give Obedience to them as fully as when the Parliament was sitting.

Signed in the Name and by the Appointment of his Excellency the Lord General, and his Council of Officers.

Whitehall the 22, of April, 1653.

William Malyn, Secret.

To ingratiate now with the Presbyterian, who yet kept up their form of Church Worship, and were the most of one publick perswasion, all disturbances in Churches were prohibited; the Phanatick licentiousness of the Army, which swarmed with Anabaptists, Quakers, and Ranters, and were now mad to be seizing all the remaining Reveue of Church Lands, in Glebe, Tythe, or Impropriations: And to this purpose Addresses were eagerly carried on, such hopes being under-hand given them, to strengthen the hands of this Dictator in carrying on the work of Sion.

He was also complemented by the French Ambassador Bourdeaux, who had made Applications to the Parliament, but was doubtful of effecting his Errand with those highest and Mightiest States who were grown formidable not only to the Dutch, but to his Master, who willingly courted them to prevent their closing with his Rebels of Bourdeaux; only Oliver as we have seen, valued them no more than Scoundrels or Rake Shames, nor would give ear to any more Enemies of Monarchy.

Being thus by force posselt of the Supreme power after he had held it some few daies, to shew the absurd and ridiculous State Caprichio's of the Council of Officers who as yet managed the Civil Authority, he transmitted it to a new Council of State, made up of the Supremest of them, and some former Junctomen; who by Proclamation commanded all Officers to execute their Trusts, as formerly, and required the same obedience; to commute with which they abated the Tax from 120000 to 90000 per menssem. It was now remarked that many great Fires usher'd in this Incendiaries Usurpation.

This Council of State did next give birth to that Monster of the little Parliament, which like an abortive Cub was cast by Cromwel, and fondly, and vainly lick'd by Harrison; both which had most different ends on this Convention, in the one a Temporal, in the other a spiritual Pride and Covetousness, (though not altogether purified from the Deceits of the World) worked in this mysterious knack of a new unheard unheard of Legislative Authority; who by the Name of Men of Integrity and Fidelity to the Cause of God, were by a bare summons from Oliver called to the Settlement of the State; that was, to be Stirrups or Footsteps to the Throne whereon Cromwel should tread, they being abject and mean people, being such as were named by the Officers, that is, by Cromwel's Agents to this Council, and of most destructive Principles to all Community and Society, either as Men or Christians. It is observable that Cromwel who utterly rejected the Rump-expedient to his instances of a new Representative of filling up the House, by foisting in Elections of their own to which (their Authority standing) they could unquestionably awe the Country, made not nice of it for himself in a more presumptuous and most illegal manner.

According to their Summons, on the 4 of July, the Members of approved Fidelity, &c. met at the Council Chamber in Whitehall, to whom Cromwel in a zealous Speech, much to the purpose of his Declaration, and the occasion of the present Meeting, stuff with various citations of Scriptures, (I am loath to nauseate the Reader with any more of his Harangues at large) to his, (but far from the) purpose, devolved the Supreme Trust; which they translated into more Common English, adjourning themselves after a short Consultation to Westminster, and giving themselves the Title & Authority of the Parliament of England, voting Mr. Francis Rouse for their Speaker, but with a Collateral Vote that he should continue in the Chair no longer than for a Month. They were persons for the most part of such mean and ignote extractions, that so far they were from being taken notice of by their Shires, each of whom (but two or three) repre-

represented, that they were scarce known in the very Towns they were born, or afterwards inhabited, till the Excise, then Committees for Sequestration, and the War in the respective Counties, made them infamously known; The rest were of his Partisans in the Parliament and High Court of Justice.

On the 12. of Dec. (as it had been directed by the Council of State) the Parliament being sate, some of the Members stood up one after another, and made a Motion for a Dissolution thereof, for that it would not be for the good of the Nations to continue it longer; this court Air almost blasted the men of Fidelity and Committee Blades, who had scarce warmed their Fingers ends in the Government, and were newly settling themselves and their Friends in a thriving way, as they had done in their Offices they had passed before; and thereupon they began one after another to make perorations of the Cause of God, and the Godly People committed to their Charge, which they could not tell how to answer him, if so easily they should give it up, and leave the Commonwealth in such a distraction as would inevitably ensue: and M. G. Harrison, & Arthur Squib (the great Sequestrator of Haberdashers-hall) were very copiously zealous in defence of their Authority: But the Military or Court-party being the Major part not thinking them worthy of a dispute or longer debate, the Speaker being of their side, rose and left the House and them sitting in it, where to prayers they went, and then resolved to continue sitting.

In the meantime Rouse the Speaker with the Mace before him (and his Followers) came to White-hall, and there resigned the Instrument he gave them, by which they were constituted a Parliament, and gave him him likewise to understand how they had left their Fellows: Their surrender was kindly received by Oliver, and they thanked for the pains they had taken in the service of the Commonwealth, however he and they had miss'd of their intentions of the good should thereby have come to the Commonwealth, which a strange spirit and perverse principle in some of the Members had solely hindred; and as to them yet Sitting in the Parliament House, he dispatch'd away Lieut. Col. White a Confident of his to dislodge them; who accordingly with a Guard of Red-coats came thither, and entering the House, demanded them in the name of the General to depart, for the Parliament was Dissolved: who replying to the contrary, and telling him they were upon Business, and ought not to be thus disturb'd; he asked, what Business? they answered, we are seeking of God; Pugh saith he, Is that all, that's to no purpose, for God hath not been within these Walls these 12 years, and so fairly compelled them out muttering with the same wrath and sorrowful look-backs, as those that had sate 30 times the same term, and could have almost pleaded prescription.

Thus was the Power emptied from one Vessel to another, as the Scribes and Chaplains of the Grandees phrased it, and could find no settlement, till Oliver was called to it by his Council of Officers, to supply this gap in the government: and now a single Person with a Council is the only expedient, for the Safety of the People; for that there is no trust nor truth in Parliaments, as their often aberrations and failures had sufficiently declared; and it was discoursed by the Abettors of this Change, that it was not Monarchy which was quarrelled at, but the corruptions and abuses ses of it, in its unlimited unbounded Prerogative, all which would be avoided, by the circumscription of it in a Protector, by his Council and a new Instrument of Government, and the supreme power of a Triennial Parliament, in whom during their Session the Sovereign Authority should reside.

So they said, and so they did: for after 4 daies time (in which Feak and his Freaking Partisans were almost run from their wits in rage and madness) Cromwel was appointed and declared for Protector of this Infant Commonwealth (and it was a tedious Interval to him) the Chancery Court at Westminster-hall being prepared for the Ceremony of the Instalment in this manner, after the usual seeking of God by the Officers of the Army.

The Protector about one of the Clock in the afternoon, came from Whitehall to Westminster to the Chancery Court, attended by the Lords Commissioners of the great Seal of England, Barons of the Exchequer, and Judges in their Robes; after them, the Council of the Commonwealth, and the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Recorder of the City of London, in their Scarlet Gowns; then came the Protector attended with many of the chief Officers of the Army; a Chair of State being set in the said Court of Chancery, the Protector stood on the left hand thereof uncovered, till a large Writing in Parchment in the manner of an Oath, was read; there being the Power with which the Protector was invested and how the Protector is to govern the three Nations; which the Protector accepted of, and subscribed in the face of the Court, and immediately hereupon sat down covered in the Chair; the Lords Commissioners then delivered up the Great Seal of England to the Protector, rector, and the Lord Mayor his Sword and Cap of Maintenance, all which the Protector return'd immediately to them again. The Court then rose, and the Protector was attended back as aforesaid, to the Banqueting house at Whitehall, the Lord Mayor himself uncovered carrying the Sword before the Protector all the way; and coming into the Banqueting-house, an exhortation was made by Mr. Lockyer, after which the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Judges departed.

The Instrument or Module, framed to be the Foundation of this present Government, was chiefly made up of the following heads.

That the Supreme Legislative Authority be and reside in a single Person, and the People in Parliament, the Execution of that Power to be in the Protector, with the advice of his Council, not to exceed Twenty and One. All Proceedings to run in the Name and Style of the Protector, and all Honours, Offices and Titles to be derived from him, that he may pardon all Offences but Treason and Murther. The Militia during the Parliament shall be in his and their hands, but in the Intervals only in his and his Councils. He and his Council to make War and Peace with ferreign Princes. Not make new Laws or abrogate old without Consent of Parliament. A Parliament to be called within six Months, and afterwards every third year, and if need be oftner, which the Protector shall not Dissolve without Consent in Parliament, till after five Months. The Parliament of English to consist of 400 to be chosen by more equal distributions, in Counties and Boroughs of Scotch 30 and so many of the Irish. The Summoning the Parliament to pass under the Seal of the Commonwealth, to the Sheriffs; and if the Protector omit or deny that, then the Commissioners of the Seal, be held under pain of High Treason, to issue out such Writs; and in case of failure in him, the High Sheriffs; and some other By-blows concerning the equality and fairness of Elections, under great penalties. No Royalist, Irish Rebels or Papists to be capable of being Elected; and in case they be, to forfeit two years Revenue; and three parts of their goods. none to be Elected under the Age of 21 years, nor unless he be a man of Integrity, a lover of God, and of good conversation. None to have voices in Election but such as were worth 200 pounds. The Elections to be forthwith transmitted to the Council of State, by the Secretary of Commissioners, and in case of dispute to the Council of State. Sixty to make a Quorum. The Protector if need be to call Parliaments between the Intervals thereof. Bills offered to the Protector; if not assented to by him within forty daies, to pass into Laws notwithstanding. The Protector with the advice of his Council, in case of death, or Breach of Trust to substitute new Privy Counsellors. A Competent Revenue to be settled for the maintenance of ten thousand Horse, and Fifteen thousand Foot, and the Navy and not to be altered or lessened but by the advice of the Council, and upon the disbanding of them, the money to be brought to the Exchequer. No new Levies, nor Laws to be made without Consent in Parliament. All forfeited Lands unsold to belong to the Protector. The Protectorate to be Elective, but the Royal Family to be excluded. Oliver Cromwel to be the present Protector. All Places of Trust and Office to be in the Protectors disposal; if in Interval of Parliament, to be Approved and Confirmed on Parliament. The rest; for the purity and toleration of Religion, out of which the Papist and Protestant were to be exempted, and all Laws in favour of them to be abrogated. All Sales of Parliament to be confirmed. Articles of War to be made good. And lastly, the Protector and his Successor to be bound by Oath to observe these present

Articles

Articles, and to uphold the Peace and welfare of the Nation; which Oath was in hæc verba.

I promise in the presence of God, not to violate or infringe the matters and things contained in the Instrument, but to observe, and cause the same to be observed; and in all things to the best of my understanding, govern the Nations according to the Laws, Statutes, & Customs; to seek their peace, and cause Justice & Law to be equally administred.

The Feat needed no more security, as good altogether as its Authority, in this following Proclamation, which was published throughout England, Scotland, and Ireland, in these words,

Whereas the late Parliament Dissolved themselves, and resigning their Powers and Authorities, the Government of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland and Ireland, in a Lord Protector, and successive Triennial Parliaments is now established: And whereas Oliver Cromwel Captain General of all the Forces of this Commonwealth is declared Lord Protector of the said Nations, and hath acceptd thereof: We have therefore thought it necessary (as We hereby do) to make Publication of the Premises, and strictly to charge and command all and every Person or Persons, of what quality and condition soever in any of the said three Nations to take notice hereof, and to conform and submit themselves to the Government so established. And all Sheriffs, Mayors, Bayliffs, &c. are required to publish this Proclamation, to the end none may have cause to pretend ignorance in this behalf.

This Miscellany of the laws, and new projections, suted a great many humours and different perswasions of the Phanaticks, Independents, Anabaptists, and others, being the second part of the Alchoran. And because there is occasion for it, we will discourse a little of the present State of Religion, and what

what opinion Cromwel best aspected. The Orthodox Protestants were wholly suppress, and yet some Reverend persons, as Dr. Usher the Bishop of Armagh, and Dr. Brownrig the Bishop of Exceter, received some shews of respect and reverence from Him; which he more manifestly boasted in the funeral Expences of the learned Usher, and this to captate a Reputation of his love to Scholars, and the meek, modest and vertuous Clergy. The Presbyterian was rather tolerated than countenanced, and yet such of them as would comply with his Court greatness, were much in his eye and his favour; for others of them he cared not, pleasingly expressing himself how he had brought under the Pride and Arrogance of that Sect, making those that would allow no liberty to others sue for it for themselves. The Independents and Anabaptists he loved and preferred by turns, and was most constant to them, as the men that would and did support his Usurpation: only he could by no means endure the Fifth Monarchy men, though by their dotages he had raised himself to this height; and therefore Feak and Rogers, were by him committed to prison in the Castle of Wind-sor, where they continued a long while, and not only so, but he let Kiffin the Anabaptist whom he had taken out of design into his favor, with his party, together by the ears with Feaks, to the raising of a Feud between them, the Ballance of his Security in the Government. The like he did betwixt the Presbyterian and Independent, a subdivided Schism from the Church of England, as Feaks, and Kiffins were from Independency; whom when out of his zeal to the Unity of Christian Religion, he seemed to bring together, to compose and accommodate all Differences; in the near probability of such expedients; he would divide and more irreconcilably sever and alienate. And this was all his practical devotion. But to return;

Great shooting of Guns at night, and Volleys of Acclamations, were given at the close of this mock solemnity by Cromwel's Janizaries; while the Cavaliers were more joyfully disposed at the Hopes of the Kings Affairs, but nobody of any Account giving the Usurper a good word or miskiditche with his greatness, save what was uttered in Fur by my Lord Mayor, and the Complices in this Fact, who tickled his ears with the Eccho of the Proclamation done with the usual Formalities. These Triumphs so disgusted Harrison, (as also Col. Rich) that he withdrew himself from the Gang, and turned publique Preacher or railer against his Comrade Oliver; who was glad to be rid of such a busie impertinent Assistant in the moduling of Government: So Cromwel had now two Commonwealth-contradivided Factions against him, the old and new Parliaments, and therefore it nearly concerned him to make much of the Anabaptist and Sectary, which now succeed Independency, as the Religion maintained and favoured above all other: and Kiffin a great Leader and Teacher, was now in great request at the Court at Whitehall, and contrarily Sir Henry Vane, jun. was look'd on a skue, as also Sir Arthur Hazlerig, and Bradshaw, and Scot, and so the Babel-builders were confounded one amongst another.

The Council appointed by the Officers, or taken rather by himself, by whose advice he was to Govern, were 14 at first.

Lord Lambert.

General Desbrow.

Lord Viscount Lisle.

Sir Gilbert Pickering.

L

General

Major General Skippon.	Francis Rouse Esq;
Sir Anth. Ashley Cooper.	Richard Major Esq;
Walter Strickland Esq;	John Lawrence Esq;
Sir Charles Wolfley.	Col. Edward Montague;
Col. Philip Jones.	Col. William Sydenhams.

I should have mentioned the Dutch War in its place, which aggrandized him with the usual victorious success; but because he was never personally engaged in the Service, but owed this Garland, as he did the glory of Dunbar, to the noble General Monck, and wore but a second-hand Triumphant Robe; I will not constellate him with that Hero's Splendor and Brightness of Fame.

That which properly concerns Cromwel is rather the Dishonour of that War, the Peace that ensued the Conclusion of it; for the Stomach of that Nation had been so humbled by several great Losses, their Trade so spoiled, and their Subjects so impoverished, that it was thought impossible for them to have equipped another Fleet, able to look our Navies in the Face; Withall there were so many Discontents and Divisions in that popular State that they were ready to ruine themselves without any of our help; yet did this puny and unfledged Prince come to a Treaty and Agreement with them, upon most mean and inconsiderable Terms, when it had been no question but another Rub at Sea, or beleaguering their Ports, would have brought them down to the humble Complement of Our faithful Tributaries; which of how great advantage it might have been to the Trade, and consequently the greatness of this Kingdom, I take not upon me to determine.

His next Affair was a Conclusion of a League with the

the Queen of Sweden, which he transmitted by the Embassy of the Lord Commissioner Whitlock; who being commissioned at his Departure by the foolish Parliament, was invested with new Credentials from Cromwel, whom accordingly he owned as his most serene Highness his Master.

Cromwel next supplied the Benches of the Court at Westminster, with the ablest of the Lawyers, whom he had invited to the publique service, and Mr. Maynard, Twisden, Nudigate, Hugh Windham were made Serjeants, and Mr. Hales one of the Justices of the Common-pleas, where St. Johns yet sat, and of the Cabinet to his Protector besides; having preferred his Man Thurloe (his Secretary at the Hague) to be his Secretary of State, the Candle or Light of the Dark Lanthorn, which St. Johns was said to be in these mysterious times of Cromwel, in all his attempts and designs of Consequence and Moment.

The Dutch Peace was also concluded on by the Ambassadors and Commissioners of the said Council for the Protector; between whom this private Article was agreed, that the Prince of Anrange, should never be restored to the Dignities, Offices, and Charge his Ancestors held and enjoyed: and this was urged for the better conservation of the Peace which would in his Restitution be endangered, because of his Relation to the King.

The Protector dined in great State upon an Invitation from the Lord Mayor, &c. at Grocers-Hall the 8. of February being Assewednesday, a very unsuitable day for any Festival but his Entertainment, who inverted all things, the Streets being railed from Temple-Bar thither, the Liveries in their Gowns in their gradual standings awaiting him; he was met at the said Gate by Alderman Vyner the Lord Mayor, who delivered him the Sword there, and having received it from him back again, bore it on Horseback bareheaded before him all the way, through which the same silence was kept, as if a Funeral had been en passant; and no doubt it was that muteness which Tacitus mentioned in Tiberius, quale magna Ira vel magni metus est silentium, no appreciations or so much as a How do ye? being given during the Cavalcade. After Dinner he was served with a Banquet, in the conclusion whereof he Knighted Alderman Vyner, and would have done the same to the Recorder Steel, for his learned Speech of Government, calculated and measured for him; but he for good Reasons avoided it; My Lord Mayor was forced to carry it home, and anger his Wife with it, who had real Honour both in her Name and Nature. Oliver at his return had the second course of a brick-bat, from the top of a house in the Strand by St. Clements, which light upon his Coach and almost spoiled his Digestion with the daringness of the affront, search was made but in vain, the person could not be found, and it could not be thought to be vengeance from above; which as yet was not ready to rain upon him.

He published a little after an Ordinance for the Trial and Approbation of Ministers, wherein Philip Nye, Goodwyn, Hugh Peters, Mr. Manton, and others, were named Commissioners: the question these men put to the Examinants, was not of Abilities or Learning, but grace in their hearts, and that with so bold and saucy Inquisition, that some men trembled at their Interrogatories, they phrasing it so, as if (as was said of the Council of Trent) they had the Holy Ghost in a Cloak-bag, or were rather Simon Mag-

gus his own Disciples; and certainly there were never such Simoniacks in the World, not a living of value, but what a Friend or the best purchaser was admitted into, to which human learning even where a former right was, was a good and sufficient bar; no less to the ruin than scandal of the Church of England, and the Protestant Religion and Professors thereof; several ignorant bold Laicks being induc'd into the best Spiritualities, as best consist'd with Oliver's Interest, which depended upon the Sectary, and their hideous divisions in Religion.

The Foreign Affairs which he now most aspected, were the two Neighbouring potent Monarchies of France and Spain, with one whereof he must of necessity quarrel, and so spend the ill blood, and convey away those humours which were so redundant in the old Souldiery, both of the Kings and Effex's Army, and if not employed in some foreign War, would create him trouble at home; this the French Cardinal, newly restored to the administration of that Monarchy, timely foresaw, and therefore a Treaty was privately and industriously carried on here by Monsieur Bonydeaux Neuville, to an amicable Association and League against the Spaniard. Cromwel's Covetousness and Thirst of Gold prevailing against his Interest and Ambition and Thirst of Malice and Mischief against the Royal Family, which was as yet shaded under the French Fleurs de Lyze, whereby all Persons expected an Invasion from hence of that Kingdom, that if it were possible for his Treason, he might drive it out of the world.

But Mazarine's Golden expedient and temporary Medium, of shifting the King and his Relations out of the Kingdom, by virtue of the said League, wholly swayed and inclined him to a War against Spain, which not long after was commenced: The greater Invitation thereto being three ships pretended Hamburgers, bur laden with the King of Spain's pieces of Eight, whether for his Account or no uncertain, that had been newly stayed and seized by the Court of Admiralty, at the prosecution of one Violet a Goldsmith: and notwithstanding the Spanish Ambassador, Don Alonso de Cardenas, protested and struggled against it, were carried to the Tower, and there minted to the Sum of 400000 Sterl. This, and other Moneys in the Exchequer, gave the greater courage to his Ambition, and his raw and unsettled Usurpation. He had also now accepted satisfaction from the King of Portugal, and was entred into League and Friendship with him.

How many are the troubles, cares, and miseries of Tyrant greatness? No sooner is one design, one passion gratified and accomplished, but another disquiet and danger invades or perplexes Him. No sooner had he sacrificed to his Covetousness, but now he must offer Victims to his Cruelty, the next Assurance of his hated Throne. There is in the Labyrinth of Vice, as in the orderly Frame of Arts and Sciences, a Circle, a Κυκλοπρωμεία, a Spherical Motion from one evil to another, till the last terminates at the beginning, the qualities and quantities being only altered, augmented, or diminished by Time or other circumstances.

From the deep Design of foraign Mines, He next converted his thoughts upon a Home-spun Plot. A horrible practice of Machiavilian Policy, and Art of Empire, with which even just Scepters have been polluted, and stained by some inhumane Ministers of

of State, upon pretences of preventing danger (who stand chargeable even with the Loyal blood this Leech sucked from their Conduits) to entrap and engage innocent persons (upon Suspicion of others of the same party, who are obnoxious to the Government) in Machinations and Conspiracies of their own forming and contrivance, and by their Emisseries betray and condemn them. This was the first bloody remarque of Cromwel's Princing, managed by his Secretary Thurloe, who drew in Colonel John Gerard and Mr. Vowel two eminent Royalists into his snare of a pretended conspiring the Death of Oliver, with others who confessed the Intention; for which these two were both condemned by a High Court of Justice, (Cromwel not daring to trust the Laws or a Jury, the Birthright of Englishmen, no more than did the former Juncto of Regicides) and the first beheaded at Tower-Hill, and the other hanged at Charing-Cross; the Colonel declaring, That he was so far from having hand or heart in it, or any encouragement from the King (as was falsely suggested) that he feared he should not die right in his favour, as being but suspected of that (though so just) Assassinate: it being below His Majesties Honour and Religion. Mr. Vowel referred his Cause, and his unjust Judges, and the Tyrant to Heavens Tribunal.

This was the Rozin, there wanted now the Consent of the People in Parliament, to fiddle and tune his Instrument. He resolved therefore to call one forthwith; for the Nation began to murmur at him (and some openly to refuse obedience) and to forget the pleasing acquiescence in the change he had made, since they saw he made it only for himself. The Nine daies wonder was over, and they had recovered them-themselves to a fresh sense of their Slavery (which might afterwards stupifie and benum them) before the several opposite parties of Royalists, and Commonwealth-men, could understand one another, and bandy both against Him.

Having now plotted and secured the Elections of as many Sectaries and of his party to the ensuing Parliament, as his young Interest could procure him; in the Month of July, to recreate himself and his Familiar Thurloe, with some Robust and jogging Exercise, to void the Gravel with which he was much troubled, He would needs shew his skill in driving a Coach with six great German Horses, sent him as a present by the Count of Oldenburgh, in Hide-Park; but those generous Horses no sooner heard the Lash of the Whip, but away they ran with Thurloe sitting trembling in it, for fear of his own Neck over Hill and Dale, and at last threw down their unexpert Governour from the Box, into the Traces, and there had likely to have trod and drawn him to pieces; but Vengeance was yet again pleased to respite him and put him over to a like judicial Execution, (after his immature Death) in 1660. Of this ominous chance many ingenious Songs were made, and one called the Jolt by Sir John Berkenhead, which being in Print in a History (and in the Rump-Songs) though the Author mistaken, is purposely forborn.

The Elections were made one and the same day throughout England; most of the Boroughs had but one Burgess, and the Shires some of them 6 or 7 Knights, all of them under sure qualifications, of not having been or being of the Cavalier party; here were 30 also by the Instrument Elected for Scotland, and as many for Ireland; all or most of whom whom were English Commanders. On the 3 of September, they met, and adjourned from the House to the Abbey, where Mr. Marshal preached, and so to the Painted Chamber, where they had a Message from the Protector to invite them to a Sermon the next day again, when Doctor Goodwin preached; and the Protector came in great State in his Coach, Cleypole Master of the Horse, and Strickland the Captain of his Guard, bareheaded on both sides; at his entrance into the Church, Lambert carried the Sword before him, and Whitlock the Purse; the Sermon done, to the Painted Chamber again, and there in a Speech he set forth these Heads.

‘That some few years agoe, none would have ‘thought of such a Dore of Hope; that he knew there ‘were yet many Humours and Interests, and that ‘Humours were above Interest, that the condition ‘of England was like Israel in the Wilderness (of ‘which the Sermon was) that this was a Healing
‘day, there was neither Noble-man, nor Gentle‘man, nor Yeoman before known by any distincti-
‘on, we had not any that bore rule and Authority,
‘but a great contempt of Magistracy and Christs ‘Ordinances; that the Fifth Monarchy was highly ‘cried up by persons who would assume the Go‘vernment, but that desired Reign wanted greater ‘Manifestation, than appeared for such men to ‘change the Authority by (and this directed at the ‘little Parliament.) He desired this Honourable As‘sembly to remedy all these Disorders, shewed that ‘the Portugal, French and Dutch differences do, and ‘did eat up the Assessments, that swarms of Jesuits ‘were crept in to make divisions, which were grown ‘so wide that nothing but his Government could ‘L remedy

'remedy them; and let men say what they will, he 'could speak it with comfort before a greater than 'any of them. Then he shewed what he had done
 'during his Government; First, his endeavour of 'reforming the Laws, having joyned all Parties to 'assist in that great work; next, his filling the Ben'ches with the ablest Lawyers; then his regulation
 'of the Court of Chancery, and then his Darling 'Ordinance for approbation of Ministers (which 'hindred all that List from invading the Ministry)
 'by men of both persuasions, Presbyterians and In'dependents, &c. And lastly, his being Instrumental
 'to call a Free Parliament, which he valued and
 'would keep it so above his life.

'Then he shewed the advantages of the Peace,
 'with the Dutch, Dane, and Swede, and the Pro'testant Interest, which he would have them im'prove and intend chiefly; that they were now upon
 'the edge of Canaan; that he spoke not as their
 'Lord, but their Fellow servant: and then bid them
 'go and chuse their Speaker. Which they did with-
 'out presenting of him, his Name William Lenthall, the old Chairman; and next day fell upon the Instrument, as they had Voted, by parts as it lay, and questioned the power; which Oliver understanding, to put them out of that course which touched his Copy-hold, after 9 daies he came to the Painted Chamber, and sending for them, declared and asserted four Fundamentals in the Instrument, which they were not to meddle with or to alter. 1. The Govern- ment by a single person and Parliament. 2. The Imper- petuity of Parliaments, or no continued succession of them.
 3. The Militia, which was his only. And 4. Liberty of Conscience; telling them a Free Parliament was but a term

term of Reciprocation, for that power which made him Protector, made them a Parliament, and therefore was very sorry they should go about to destroy the Settlement ; which to prevent, and cease such Debates (though he be denied any negative voice) he was necessitated to appoint a Test or Recognition of the Government as it was established (by every Member) before they sat again.

This bogled at first three quarters of them, especially the Commonwealth-men, and those of the late Long Parliament, so that of four hundred and odd there appeared but two hundred, but were made up at last three hundred ; for the old ones would not be baulked so, and fell afresh upon the same disputes and ran out the Articles, resolving to put the whole judgment of the House upon them, into one entire Bill, and so present it, but in truth to spin out time, and work upon the Protectors occasions for money, which was proposed in the House, and coldly and slowly considered.

Just at their sitting down, the Protector published several Ordinances, which being passed and bore date before, were to pass as authentique as Acts by the Instrument ; one for paying the money into the Treasury, that was raised for the propagation of the Gospel in Wales, another for making Souldiers free of all Corporations, and to exercise any Trades ; Another to turn out all honest men under the notion of scandalous Preachers and Ministers, Common-Prayer being their chiefest Imputation ; and a fourth to survey Kings Lands, &c. and for doubling upon Deans and Chapters, which sales those many changes of power had much retarded and depretiated. The more occult cause of the publication of these Ordinances, was to let the Parliament understand, that Oliver took his Instrument to be in a good case, and sufficiently warranted already.

In this Convention Lambert laboured Tooth and Nail to have the Instrument confirmed, for by that the Protectorate was left undermined and Elective, threatening them that if this Parliament would not, they would call four or five Parliaments one after another till it was Enacted: (the same Art of menacing which Oliver used to the preceding Juncto) but that not prevailing (the Parliament dissolved) by his Interest in the Army, He procured Addresses both from Scotland and Ireland, as well as here, declaring their Resolution to stand by this Government in defence of the Protectors Life and Dignity against all Opposition; which in this Stratocracy was to be as good a Security as Parliamentary Assent. There were some Superiour Officers, as Lieut. Col. Majors, and Captains, who were yet for a Commonwealth, who had private Meetings, and contrived the seizing this Rebel, and deliver him to the Justice of the Parliament: but by Pride's Discovery, who was made privy to this business, they were prevented, and their Commissions only taken away; Cromwel not willing by severer punishments to make a noise that there was such a potent Faction in the Army.

Lambert was very officious in this matter, as neither resenting the late affront put upon him by Cromwel (when he advanced Fleetwood in his place to the Supreme Command in Ireland, though with lesser Title than he arrogated, who made magnificent preparation for his Investiture in the Lieutenantship, and would suffer no Diminution of that Honor) nor senting his future designs and cheats, as to his promised promised Succession to the Sovereignty here.

During those Protectoral Intrigues, the King's Interest had got such footing again in England, that all, or most of the Gentlemen and Counties thereof, were engaged for it, and therefore while Lambert managed one Province, (the Affairs of the Parliament) wherein Oliver would not descend so low, as to be pragmatikal, and sceptically busie with their Debates against His power, as wrested and usurped from the people; He was mainly intent upon the proceedings of the Royallists, the particulars whereof he had betrayed to him weekly, a constant correspondence being held betwixt him and one Manning a Retainer, and Under-Secretary to the King at Colen, his Father being killed in his Service at Alresford in the year 1644.

The price of this Treason was no less than 6000*.l.* a year, most whereof came to the King by this fellows Hands, as sent over by his and his Friends procurement, but on purpose by so notable a service in the Kings necessities, to scue himself into the secrets of His Majesties designs.

Hence came the western Association and Attempt of the Noble Penruddock in the West, to be so suddenly defeated, with the like Insurrections in several parts of England in the year 1654. For upon certain notice of the daies appointed for their Rising, Cromwel to be before hand with them gave out supposed and false daies, and made the like Apperances, particularly at Shrewsbury; by which means the confederates came to conceive there was some Treachery among themselves, and did then wisely desist from the danger of taking publique Arms against him; For a fuller accompt of all which, I must refer fer the Reader to the Histories of the Times lately published, though I should take notice of his Cruelty against those unfortunate Gentlemen.

The Event of this, by which he had over-reached the King in his own Deligns, and the Hopes of his rich successes in the West-Indies (by robbing another Prince) whither his Fleet and Army under General Pen and Venables was now arrived, which also I shall only mention, for the Story is trite and vulgar) made Oliver most blith and confident, and his Court of Beggars, and such like mean people, very gay and jocund: A great deal of State was now used towards him, and the French Cringe, and other ceremonious pieces of gallantry and good deportment, which were thought unchristian and favouring of Carnality, introduced in place of austere and down looks, and the silent Mummery of starched and Hypocritical gravity, the only becoming Dress; (forsooth) of Piety and Religion. He had now a Guard of Halberdiers in gray Coats, welted with black Velvet; over whom Walter Strickland was Captain; and a Lord Chamberlain Sir Gilbert Pickering; Two Masters of Requests, Mr. Bacon and Mr. Sadler; a Master of his Horse, his Son Claypoole; and generally all Officers of Honour both to his own person, and his Wives; who very frugally Huswifed it, and would nicely and finically tax the expensive unthriftiness (as said she) of the Other Woman who lived there before her. But I must not engage here in her impertinencies, though a many pretty stories shall happily be told of this obsolete Princess.

It will be requisite to speak something of his manner and course of Life, now raised to a very near fruition of the Sovereignty, this being the Solstice of

of his Fortunes. His Custome was now to divert himself frequently at Hampton-Court, (which he had saved from Sale, with other Houses of the Kings for his own Greatness) whither he went and came in post with his Guards behind and before, as not yet secure of his Life from the justice of some avenging hand; Here he used to hunt, and at the fall of a Deer, where he would be sure to be present, embrue his hands in the blood of it, and therewith asperse and sprinkle the Attendants: and sometimes to cokes the neighbouring Rusticks, give them a Buck he had hunted, and money to drink with it; His own Diet was very spare and not so curious, except in publique Treatments, which were constantly given every Monday in the Week, to all the Officers of the Army not below a Captain, where he dined with them, and shewed a hundred Antick Tricks, as throwing of Cushions, and putting live Coals into their Pockets and Boots; a Table being likewise spread every day of the week for such Officers as should casually come to Court: and this was his greatest Expence, which and other charges of the Government, he levied as yet by his and his Councils Ordinances, as duly and respectfully obeyed as Acts of Parliament.

With these Officers while he seemed to disport himself, taking of his Drink freely, and opening himself every way to the most free familiarity, He did meerly lye at the Catch of what should incogitantly and with such unsuspected provocation fall from their Mouths; which he would be sure to record and lay up against his occasion of reducing them to the Speakers memory, who were never like to forget the prejudice and damage they had incurred red by such loose Discoveries of their Minds and Inclinations.

He was a great Lover of Musick, and entertained the most skilful in that Science in his pay and Family; in that like wicked Saul, who when the evil Spirit was upon him, thought to lay and still him with those Harmonious charms: but generally he respected or at least pretended a Love to all ingenious and eximious persons in any Arts, whom he procured to be sent or brought to him: but the niggardliness and incompetence of his reward, shewed that this man was a personated Act of Greatness, and that private Cromwel yet governed Prince Oli-ver. Amongst the rest of those Virtuosi, He favoured a Poet too, who very elegantly sang his Marston-Moor Envy, but with more misfortune than others, who made the Muses slaves to his Triumphs, and Pegasus to draw his Chariot.

He had twenty other freaks in his head, for sometimes before he had half dined, he would give order for a Drum to beat, and call in his Foot Guards, like a Kennel of Hounds, to snatch off the meat from his Table, and rear it in pieces: the like Joco's and Frisks he would have with other Company; even with some few of the Nobility, when he would not stick to tell them what Company they had lately kept; when and where they had drunk the Kings health and the Royal Families, bidding them when they did it again, to do it more privately, and this without any passion, and as festiuous Drol discourse.

But upon the news of the Defeat at Hispaniola, whence he had promised himself Mountaines of Gold, and Rocks of Gems, to the maintenance of his Mamalukes, and perpetuating the Army, and the the Royalists breeding new Designs, he began to cast off the Merry Devil and set the Tyrant altogether, and not without Cause. For

The effects of this Parliament rupture encouraged two most opposite parties to conspire against this Protector, the Monarchists and Cavaliers (as we must so distinguish the Royal party upon this difference,) who longed for their rightful Sovereign Charles the Second, the Fifth Monarchy expected King Jesu, the Courtiers and those engaged by them or with them, with Cromwel himself, desired King Oliver; and every one of these manifested much Impatience, but none of them could attain their Wishes, and when Oliver might afterwards, he durst not. The Protector was no way ignorant of this, and therefore he resolved to deal with the weakest first, which yet by underminings was more dangerous than the other: The Army was corrupted by that Millenary Principle, and that was to be purged, so that as Harrison and Rich had bin laid aside, and not long after committed with Carew and Courtney into several remote Castles; so now Gen. Manck had order to seize Major General Overton, and the Majors Bramston and Holms, and other Officers, and cashier them, after Fines and good security for their Behaviour; Overton was sent up to the Tower, and his Regiment conferred on Col. Morgan; Colonel Okey's Regiment taken from him, and given to a sure Consider, and so the danger from the Army was quickly suppress: Corner but now Col. Joyce, was likewise male-content at this Change, and signified so much to Cromwel's Face, whom he upbraided with his own Service and Faithfulness, but escaped any other Censure than a bidding him be gone; Cromwel knowing him to be one of those mad men that would say or do any thing they were bid.

Now happ'ned occasion, or rather Cromwel made it one, for him to shew his zeal to the Protestant Cause, and publish himself to the World the Champion or Hector thereof; this was also one secret step and reach to the Crown, by invading the sacred Title of the Defender of the Faith, due only to the Hereditary Sovereigns of England; Herein also he aimed as in the Proverb, to hit two Birds with one Stone, not doubting but to find another Mine in the charitable minds and compassion of this Nation towards the parallel sufferings of the old Waldenses in Piedmont to the Irish Massacres, which were set out and drest here with greater Skill of Butchery, than the Actors could handsomly do it there, and it was said the Copy was drawn from that Original.

Alderman Vyner and Pack were made Treasurers for this money, which amounted to a very large sum and reached the full design of the Protector; a small parcel whereof was now remitted to Geneva, the French King having newly before accommodated the businesse, the Duke refusing to admit Cromwel's Mediation.

There was another Artifice of the Protectors to set this businesse forward, and to countenance it: which was, Addressees from the Army here and abroad, offering their Service in this common cause of the Protestant Religion, no way doubting but that God in his due time would confound those Enemies of his People, as he had shewn his salvation by themselves, in the same Controversie to that

(163)

A new Plot was now started, and most of the Nobility and Gentlemen of England secured; Sir Geoffry Palmer, Lord Willoughby of Parham, Lord Lovelace, Earl of Lindsey, Lord Newport, and Sir Richard Wingfield, Lords Maynard, Petre, Lucas, and Faulkland, Sir Frederick Cornwallis, &c. and this done by Manning, whose Villany was not yet discovered, though to render a due Account of him, his Treachery was before related. County Troops were also now established for security of his Highness, such Trooper 8 l. a year pay and more in case of Service, a Captain a 100 l. and Officers proportionably; and as these new Forces were raised here, so were other old ones disbanded in Scotland and Ireland; in which last place the disbanded were yet to be the same kind of Militia, they being settled in the Rebel forfeited Lands, their Tenure being their Service, and thus that Kingdome was re-peopled. An Agent that had come hither from Ragotzi Prince of Transylvania, now departed, the Conspiracy betwixt whom and the King of Sweden, and the Swede and Cromwel was just ripe for execution.

The Spanish War therefore commencing, the Protector began new practices against the Cavalier party, whose interest and spirit was against his Government as high as ever: he foresaw that by the French peace, the King only shifted and changed war from one quarter to another, and was yet as neer as before, and in a more opportune and advantageous posture; for that the King of Spain and he would certainly concur against him, and so the Low Countries, his Provinces and Ports, be open and at the Service of our Sovereign; therefore his party was by all waies, how unjust and tyrannical soever to be crush'd and suppress: it began with the Clergy who were neither to keep School, nor cure, nor be Chaplains, except they gave signal Testimony of their Apostacy from the Church; it next extended to all sorts of men, by the revived Act of 1652. forbidding all Cavaliers or such as meant well to the peace of the Kingdome in their subscription to the personal Treaty in 1648. by a new Proclamation to that purpose, from giving Voyces of Electing, or to be Elected themselves upon their utmost peril: then came out a Declaration for Decimating such who were actually in Arms: and to shew the Reasons of such proceedings against them, Cromwel therein taking it for granted; that the whole Mass of them were engaged in the late design of Penruddocks, and observing their Malignity to the Government, by refusing to match their Relations but within themselves, and so to propagare the quarrel from one Generation to another; that they supplied their King (as they call'd him) with money; that their Clergy were as refractory as ever; and that therefore since by them the peace so endangered could not be kept, nor the cause and well affected secured but by keeping up a standing Army by a constant pay, it was requisite the charge should be born by those who caused it.

For the better dispatch of this Affair, he had erected a new military Authority, like the Turkish Bashes, distributed into several Provinces or Counties, with an unbounded power, England being now cantoned into this Hendecarchy. viz. Kent and Surrey under Col. Kelsey; Sussex, Hants, and Berkshire under Goff; Gloucestershire, Wills, Dorset, Somerset, Devon, and Cornwal, under Col. Desborough; Oxfordshire, Buckingham, Hartford, Cambridge, bridge, Isle of Ely, Essex, Norfolk and Suffolk, under Lieutenant General Fleetwood; London, Major General Skippon; Lincolnshire, Nottingham, Derby, Warwick and Leicester under Whalley; Northamptonshire, Bedford, Rutland and Huntingdon under villanous Butler; Worcestershire, Hereford, Shropshire and North-Wales under Col'. Berry, Cheshire, Lancashire and Stafford under Col. Worfeley; Yorkshire, Durham, Cumberland, Northumberland and Westmorland, under Lord Lambert; Westminster and Middlesex, under Col. Berksted: their Commission was to take a Roll and Account of all suspected persons of the Kings party, and such as were actually so to receive security of them, in which they were to be bound to act nothing against the Government, and to reveal all Plots that should come to their knowledge; they were to suppress all Horse-Races, Cock-matches, and other concourses of people, to secure the High ways, to take engagement from Cavaliers for their Servants and Children, and those that did not so, nor give security, to commit to prison, and to rate and receive the mony rising from this Decimation. In short there was nothing which they might not do, nor which they did not; such an Arbitrary vast power they had from the Protector. To this purpose a M. G. Office was erected in Fleetstreet, as other Courts had, where these Recognizances were entred, and all other the like Affairs, dependencies, & concerns thereof entred and recorded; by this means the Tyrant intended to inform himself of the value and quality of every estate and person, together with the number of that party in every County throughout the Kingdome. Most of those Loyal persons formerly secured were hereup-

on set at liberty, but by another 30 Mile Proclamation driven into the Country, into the bounds of the several Major Generals, who presently took cognizance of them, and summoned them to their respective Residences: they sat sometimes without, other times with some of the old Committees, where they received accounts of Estates, which were raised to the tenth penny yearly. Some bought off that Tax and incumbrance by a present Sum, at three years purchase, which was very acceptable; for money was the thing the Usurper wanted: others looked for a neerer Redemption, and to be constrained to that payment: the well affected and godly people voiced this to be a just and reasonable imposition; for when should they be at quier, and enjoy themselves in the goods they had got, free from the interrupting endeavour of this old and restless Enemy? so that there wanted not Abettors and Assistants to this most religious work of the Major Generals; who had ordered in the first place, that no Cavalier should keep or wear either Arms offensive or defensive, but streightwaies deliver them, so that they lay at the mercy of whomsoever they met, and at the Discretion and charity of whosoever resorted to their Houses, for what they had left.

The Barbarous Cruelty and Severity of these Bashawes, to the Orthodox Clergy, while with the Hotness of the persecution it suffocated the true Religion, did warm and foster the viperous brood of Sects and Heresies into monstrous luxuriences; For besides the Ranter, who at this time began to infest the Church, and multiply exceedingly, and the Socinian, who denied the Divinity of Christ; one Biddle being infamous for those impious opinions, as Erbury formerly a Minister for Rantling; the Quakers appeared like Locusts, and overspread the whole Kingdom, even to the Disquiet of Oliver himself, who could not endure to hear of their Anti-Magisterial principles, the Schisme consisting chiefly of such as had been of the Army or rebel Faction. The Heighth of that Phrenzy and Delusion so possessed the haughty mind of one James Naylor (as if Pride and Ambition were the reigning secular sins) that he fancied himself to be our Saviour, procuring such Worship to be done him, as was due only to that blessed Divinity. This blasphemous Impostor was severely punished by the consent of Oliver (who perceived Lambert, whose Soldier this was formerly, to stickle for him on design to cajole his party;) But not from any sense of this Impiety, and zeal to Christ or his Worship; for he had lately struck a Bargain with the Jews that deny him, but the Ministers who were to dispute with Ben Israel their Agent contrary to command dissenting from his covetous project, He only gulled them of their earnest money.

as

By this mixture of subtlety with Cruelty and Rapine of all sorts, he had so establish'd himself, and his formidable greatness (engaging in a foraign war with the French against the Spaniard in Flanders, whither he sent Commissary General Reynolds with 6000 men, who joyntly took in St. Venant and Mardike in the close of the Summer 1657. the latter being put into English hands) that the Royal party began truly to dread his mischievous power; the effects whereof were felt also in very remote parts of the World, in the Polish and Danish War, by his partaking with and assisting the King of Sweden (when he pretended a Mediation between them, having dispatch'd Mr. Rolt of his Bedchamber, and Col. Jephson to Carolus Gustavus, and Mr. now Sir Philip Meadows, to Frederick King of Denmark) to the diverting the German Emperour to the care of his own Dominions, and by that means depriving the Spaniard of his aid, and consequently frustrating all his Majesties designs of recovering, his rights to these Kingdoms.

I must omit his Successes by Blake at Porta Ferina, and Sancta Cruz, for which the English valour was famous; as also Sir Richard Stayners taking and Spoyling 7. Gallies from the West-Indies, laden with plate, which were substantial Trophies, and made his power terribly renowned.

And therefore now he thought it time to shew his Son Richard to the World, whom to avoid the Suspicion of designing the Sovereignty to be Hereditary in his Family, and to amuse Lambert who would not brook other Successor than himself His Rival if not Superiour now in the affection of the Army, he had kept in the Country, in Hampshire (where he had married the Daughter of one Major of Southampton, with a very plentiful fortune, the support and maintenance of him now) among the Converse of the Gentry Royallists to insinuate into their affection and good liking by some kind of Offices and Civilities he procured from Court, and by his own debonair and affable Disposition: The first publique Honour done him was the Chancelorship of Oxford, in which he was solemnly invested after his Father had purposely resigned it at Whitehall, next he was sworn a Privy Councillor, and made a Colonel in the Army, to have an Interest in all Affairs and parts of the Body Politique, and

and not long after in the next Parliament, after their recess, the first Lord of the other House, and now styled the most Noble Lord Richard, and rise discourses there were of Richard the Fourth, but they proved no more than the story of Queen Dick.

His Son Harry Cromwel, lately married to Sir William Russels Daughter, he likewise sent in the quality of Lord Lieutenant, to succeed his Son in Law Fleetwood, in Ireland: only Scotland could not be taken from General Monck, and disposed in the hands of his more confident Relations, Fleetwood or Desborough being designed for that Government. His Daughters likewise were all married, Elizabeth his Darling, before his late Greatness, to a private Gentleman, one Mr. Cleypole of Warwickshire; his Daughter Mary to the Lord Viscount Fauconberg, of the noble Family of the Bellasis, and his younger Daughter Frances to Mr. Robert Rich, eldest Son to Robert Lord Rich, and Grandson to Rob. Earl of Warwick: all three of which Rich's dyed within one year after this unfortunate and unglorious Match. So that he thought he had established his house: but the Foundation being laid in sand tempered with Blood, the next gust and boisterous Wind blew it like Chaff and scattered and dispersed it to nothing.

From this haughty confidence he was invited to call another Parliament, and to assume from thence the long awaited result of his Ambition, the Crown Imperial of England. All other things moreover did seem to conspire to the same purpose, except the levelling Fifth Monarchy Party, and Lamier's for the Presbyterian and other Sectaries, who had their hands full of Sacrilegious and Treasonable Penny-worths of Ecclesiastical and Crown and Delinquents linquents Lands; were most eagerly desirous of a settlement of the Government by Law, that might secure and confirm their purchases; the more indifferent Royalists preferred any Legal (no manner how or what) Authority, rather than be continually tasked and oppressed by the outrageous unlimited violence of the Major Generals, whom Cromwel had on purpose set up, as he did the Little or Foolish Parliament, to make another Title he gaped at, more acceptable to the People.

As to the Fifth Monarchy men, he had meerly pri- ed into that danger, and seized and took the chief of that Party, among whom was Venner the Wine-Cooper, being engaged somewhat after in a Plot, in a house in Shoreditch, where some Arms were taken, and an Ensign with a Lyon couchant of the Tribe of Judah painted in it, having this Motto, Who shall rounce him up?

And hereupon Harrison, Carew, Rich, Vice-Admiral Lawson, Courtney, Portman, Day, and the like, were imprisoned in remote places, as Col. Overton, Major Holms, and others of the same party, had been seized as before in Scotland, and cashiered by General Monck, according to Cromwel's Order, and sent up Prisoners to the Tower of London.

As to the Levellers, he had lately discovered their practices and combinations against him, and had likewise clapt up the chief of them; one Major Wildman in order to his Tryal being taken at Marleborough, inditing and drawing Declarations against him; so that they were at a stand and a losse which way to proceed, to the unsettling and over-throw of his Tyrannical power procured by so many tricks and cheats put upon them by him; so that afterwards

wards when they began private Subscriptions to Petitions, and Addresses to the Parliament against the Kingship, he peremptorily upon their peril forbade them to intermeddle with their Consultations, and so awed and dashed them, that they never offered any more afterwards, to hold up so much as a Finger against him. Lambert was the only impediment, and we shall see him neatly and quietly removed and discarded like the rest of his former Confidants.

This Olivarian Parliament brought together by these means was not lesse awed in its Election by the Major Generals (they themselves and all their friends being returned for Members, while the Gentry and other Honest men being confined or under some qualification or other, could not, or dared not appear, particularly Col. Berkstead, and Kiffin the Anabaptist, by Voyces of Red-coats, got themselves returned Knights of the Shire for the County of Middlesex, with Sir William Roberts, and Mr. Chute (4 as the Instrument directed;) then in the Admission to the House, where a Recognition of his Highness and the Government by a single person, with a guard of Soldiers was ready placed, and unless each Member swallowed the one, he might not passe the other, by which means almost 200. were at the first dash secluded, those within taking no notice of the force, but referring the excluded to the Examination of the Privy Council.

The first work this Parliament did was their declaring the Justice of the War against Spain (the Cromwellian party personating the Interest and Honour of the Nation, that they might by that be looked upon for all this garbling, as a due representative, and to credit their ensuing By-blows,) and a Resolution lution to assist the Protector in it. And next as the grand and Liminary work to Oliver's Regality, An Act for the renouncing the Title of his Majesty, and the whole Line of King James; seconded with another for the Security of His Highness person, in which they alledged the Peace and safety of the Nation was bound up.

And that this might appear more necessary and opportune, a Plot was hatched by Cromwel and Thurloe, for further quashing all Levelling and Fifth Monarchy designs against that party; a Book had likewise been lately divulged, styled Killing no Murder, wherein it was proved, that it was most lawful, just, necessary and honourable to kill him, and this printed with the Name of one Allen a disbanded Leveller, but so politely and learnedly written, that it intimated a more exact and curious hand; whoseever it was, it scared Cromwel almost out of his Wits, and made him betake himself to perventionary Artifices, and fright Assassinsates with his Severity against the Supposititious Authors of pretended dangers.

This Scare-Crow was one Miles Syndercombe a disband of Overton's in Scotland by General Monck a Leveller and Fifth Monarchist, both which parties he conjoined in this trap, as most feared by him, by the wily Arts of Thurloe, who set one Cecil and Toop of Cromwel's Life-Guard, to urge this Male-content into a Conspiracy of the Protectors Death; This was readily assented to, and several Engines and Instruments fixed for that purpose and places appointed, and Whitehal Chappel to be fired; all which was from time to time discovered, and Syndercombe after the last vain experiment, seized and arraigned raigned, and after a careless defence convicted and sentenced for Treason, which he avoided (as the Coroners Jury gave their Verdict) by poysoning himself in the Tower the night before his Execution, and was drawn at a Horse Tail to Tower-hill, and inhumed and a Stake driven through him under the Scaffold.

For this Delivery of his Highness the Parliament voted a Thank-giving, and attended him at the Banquetting-House in White-hall with a gratulatory Oration, setting forth the Ruine that was intended in that Horrible Treason to the whole Protestant Religion throughout the World; with the like parasitical designed falshoods; but to the almost spoiling the Complement, the Stairs in the ascending broke, and lamed Richard Cromwel and others, who for amends were invited to dinner there upon the Thanksgiving-day; and that Courtesie requited by a more gaudy Gift.

For the next day Alderman Pack (a great Excise Commissioner, and in greater Arrears for it to 30000*l.* and deep in the Piedmont Account) from the advantage of this Royal Treat, suddenly started a Motion like a Puppet jerkt with a Wire, that in regard of the strange unsettlement and discomposure of the Nation, and the minds of men, and the ill Aspect it had upon forraign Princes, and all Trade; that therefore the Protector might be desired to assume the style of King, as the most known and most agreeable Government: and presently tooth and nail the Court party were at it; and after sundry consultations passed a Resolution in order to his being Kinged by the second part of the Instrument, called The Humble Petition and Advice of the Parliament: which being now in debate we must pursue with a further Account. The

The suitable political talk of the party of the Usurper, was now engaged in strained Arguments, for a Monarchy in the person of this their Ring-leader;
 and this Maxime was broach'd in the News-Book,
 That there was no everlasting principle in Government as to any particular form, that Government is but a temporary expedient, that it is like Ultima tabula post Naufragium, in the hazard of the Common-wealth the next shift may be made use of.
 The same was the inspired reason into the Humble Petition and Advice, which after several debates and resolutions was drawn into that Consistency, the main whereof was to desire the Protector to change that Title for the other of King. On the 9.
 of April the Parliament, having desired a Meeting with him, came to the Banqueting-House in Whitehall, where Sir Thomas Widdrington in a Speech commended the Title and Office of a King, as fer-led here with Christianity, approved by our Ancestors, consisting with our Laws and Temper of the people, and then presented him with the Module of the Humble Petition, &c. To this tender, Cromwel, in a fit of Devotion, answered, That it was a weighty matter, and therefore desired space to seek God, that the charge laid upon him was too great for him to bear without his Assistance; that the English were the best people in the World, and required therefore all tendernesse and consideration of their Liberties, &c.

The next day a Committee was appointed to attend him, and receive his Answer, which being insignificant, they upon report thereof resolved to adhere to their Petition, and appointed a Committee of above half the House to attend him, to receive from him his doubts and scruples touching any of the particulars contained in the Petition, &c. and to offer reasons for his satisfaction, for the maintenance of the Resolution of the House, and wherein they cannot satisfy to report. The chief of this Committee were Mr. Whitelock, Lord Chief Justice Glyn, Lord Broghall, Lenthall, Lisle; Philip Jones, Fiennes, Strickland, Thurloe, Sir Richard Onslow; Sir Charles Woolfley, &c.
 the

We have, through these Labyrinths of his shifted Designs, now clued him to his lustful and adulterous Usurpation, which the nocturnal pollutions of his Dream had so long before fansied and acted in his thoughts.

This was the critical Time, and the very Juncture of his accomplishment of all his projections upon the Crown, which now seemed to court his Brows by the complemental tender of a Parliament so pick'd and cull'd to his purpose. But it pleased God to rescue the Honour and Majesty of England from the profanation of his Temples, by some sudden emergent dangers, and suspicion he raised in his Breast, and to elude his Royal Phantasms with Rival and Democrattick apparitions: His Oracles now ceased, and a lying Spirit was in the mouth of his Prophets, who in their preachments harped upon this Subject. Now that the Reader may know how the whole mystery and cabal of this Business was managed by the above mentioned Committee (who would fain have drawn Oliver under the yoke of Laws, and retrencht his exorbitant power of the Sword) and Cromwel (who feared they would fortifie his Title, and weaken his Tenure, and had notice that Lambert laboured in the Debauch of the Army) He is here presented with the sum of that abortive
Regal

Regal Consultation, which like the Philosophers Stone, or rather the Apples of Sodom, vanished and perished in the Attrectation.

After many meetings and conferences together at Whitehall, the Commissioners being impowered to receive his Highnesses Scruples, at his request (the whole Affair being managed with Royal State and respect to him) they came to these Disputes. It was alledged by the Committee who were to offer and make play, that the Title of King had been confirmed by all Parliaments, for 1300 years, and the person, not the name displeasing to any of them; That it was interwoven with the Laws, and the very consent of this Parliament in being.

To this the Protector answered that these were suatory, not convincing or compulsive Arguments; That the Title of the Protector might be made accommodable to the Laws, by the consent of the Parliament, as well as the Title of King was made so by the same; that the Title of King would be displeasing to many godly men, and Officers of the Army, who had declared against the Title and Office.

To these it was replied, That the Title ought to be accommodated to the Laws, not the Laws to it. That Invention of Titles was suspected as the Veil or Concealment of some design against the Publique; and that therefore the Parliament of England had scrupled the new Title of King of Great Britain, to King James. That if he regarded not his own Honour and Greatnesse, yet he should respect the Honour and Reputation of the Kingdome. That the name of Protector had alwayes been unfortunate to the Kingdome during the Minority of our Princes, and also to themselves. That it being given him by the Soldiery it sounded of Conquest.

Conquest. That when the Kingly Title was abolished in the Roman Empire, nothing but confusion followed, nor could the State find Rest, either under Consul, or Dictators, or Prince of the Senate, untill the pleasure and will of Cæsar came to be acknowledged for Law.

Other instances there were of the Commissioners, who severally by order of the Committee delivered their Answers to him, as namely the reason of the Change of the Stile of Lord to King of Ireland in H. 8. time, for the better and more regular Government of that Nation, and Examples of a neighbouring Protestant Kingdome of Sweden, who had crowned their Marshal that took up Arms with them against their Sovereign, but their main Argument was drawn from the Statutes of 9 Edw. 4. & 3 H. 7. by which all persons were indemnified that took up Arms for the King in being, which was one and the chief reason said Whitlock, why so many at first assisted the King against the Parliament, and would be his Hignesses case and security. And lastly, to his Argument of displeasing many godly men, and that Providence seemed to cross the Introduction of the Kingly Office by a seven years overthrow of it; He was answered that the reduction of the Commonwealth to Monarchy, was a greater Act than from Monarchy to the Protectorate; That in all Governments some men would be unsatisfied, and that therefore his safest way would be to rely on this Settlement by the Parliament. But after all Cromwells fears surmounted his ambition, and he told them in a long Harangue, that he could not accept the Title of King it being against his Conscience.

The Protector having refused the Title of King (awaiting a more opportune time and advantage to reach reach to that top and height of his Ambition, which inwardly tormented him) was now by the Parliament to be confirmed in his former dignity: and a Committee called of the Settlement was ordered to prepare an Explanatory part to the Humble Petition and Advice, in respect of the Protector's Oath, his Councils, the Members of Parliament, the other House, which was to consist of 60 and odd Lords of Cromwel's Election, of whom it will be needless to give an Account: all which with some Acts being prepared and finished, the Protector came to the Painted Chamber, and sent for the Parliament, where the Speaker tendered him these Acts of State, besides others relating unto Trade, &c. *An Act for Assessment of 60000 l. a Month, for 3 Months, from March for the three Kingdomes. Another money Act for 50000 l. for England, 6000 l. for Scotland, and 9000 l. for Ireland. An Act for preventing multiplicity of Buildings in and about the Suburbs of London, and within 10 Miles thereof; and a whole years Revenue to be paid for every Dwelling, or House built upon any new Foundation since 1620. and (this was the reason and soul of that Law.) An Act for punishing such as live at high rates and have no visible Estates: And lastly, for the observation of the Lords Day. There was a Bill for ascertaining and satisfying the Publique Faith, that these Parties might seem to intend the ease of the People; but it was but once read and committed, and resumed afterwards to as much purpose very briskly by the Council of this Protector. At the Signing of these Cromwel made this short Speech.*

I perceive that among these many Acts of Parliament, there hath been a very great care had by the Parliament,

Parliament, to provide for the just and necessary support of the Commonwealth, by these Bills for levying of money, now brought to me, which I have given my Consent unto; and understanding it hath been the practice of those who have been chief Governours, to acknowledge with thanks to the Commons, their care and regard to the Publick: I do very heartily and thankfully acknowledge their kindness herein.

The principal substance of the Humble Petition, &c. was this.

1. That his Highnesse, under the Title of Lord Protector, would be pleased to exercise the Office of Chief Magistrate of England, &c. and to govern according unto all things in this Petition and Advice; also, that in his life time he would appoint the Person that should succeed in the Government after his death. 2. That he would call Parliaments consisting of 2 Houses once in 3 years at farthest. 3. That those persons who are legally chosen by a free Election of the People to serve in Parliaments, may not be excluded from doing their duties, but by consent of that House whereof they are Members. 4. In the fourth, was shewn the qualifications of Parliament-Members. 5. In the fifth, the power of the other House. 6. That the Laws and Statutes of the Land be observed and kept, and no Laws altered, suspended, abrogated, repealed, or new Law made, but by Act of Parliament. 7. For a constant yearly Revenue, 1000000 l. to be settled for maintenance of the Navy and Army; and 300000 l. for support of the Government, besides other Temporary supplies, as the Commons in Parliament shall see the necessities of the Nations to require. 8. That the number of the Protectors Council should not be above 21, whereof the Quorum to be 7. and not under. 9. The chief Officers of State, as Chancellors,

tellers, Keepers of the great Seal, &c. to be approved of by Parliament. 10. That his Highnesse would encourage a godly Ministry in these Nations; and that such as do revile or disturb them in the Worship of God, may be punished according to Law; and where the Laws are defective, new ones to be made in that behalf.

11. That the Protestant Christian Religion be professed and no other; and that a Confession of Faith be agreed upon and recommended to the people of these Nations; and none be permitted by words or writings to revile or reproach the said Confession of Faith, &c.

Which he having Signed, declared his acceptance in these words.

That he came thither that day, not as to a Triumph but with the most serious thoughts that ever he had in all his Life, being to undertake one of the greatest burthens, that ever was laid upon the back of any humane Creature; so that without the support of the Almighty, he must sink under the weight of it, to the damage and prejudice of these Nations. This being so, he must ask help of the Parliament, and of those that fear God, that by their Prayers he might receive assistance from God: for nothing else could enable him to the discharge of so great a duty and trust.

That seeing this is but an Introduction to the carrying on of the Government of these Nations, and there being many things which cannot be supplied, without the assistance of the Parliament, it was his duty to ask their help in them; not that he doubted, for the same Spirit, that had led the Parliament to this, would easily suggest the same to them. For his part nothing would have induced him to take this unsupportable burthen to flesh and blood, but that he had seen in the Parliament a great care of those things, which might really answer the ends that were engaged for, and make clearly for the Liberty of the Nations, and for the Interest and preservation of all such as fear God under various forms. And if these Nations be not thankful to them for their Care therein, it will fall as a sin upon their heads.
answer

Yet there are some things wanting that tend to reformation, to the discountenancing vice, and encouragement of virtue; but he spake not this as in the least doubting their Progress, but as one that doth heartily desire, to the end God may Crown their work, that in their own time, and with what speed they judge fit, these things may be provided for.

There remained only the Solemnity of the Inauguration or Investiture, which being agreed upon by the Committee and the Protector, was by the Parliament appointed to be performed in Westminster-hall; here at the upper end whereof, there was an Ascent raised, where a Chair and Canopy of State was set, and a Table with another Chair for the Speaker, with Seats built Scaffold-wise for the Parliament on both sides: and places below for the Aldermen of London, and the like. All which being in a readinesse, the Protector came out of a Room adjoining to the Lords House, and in this order proceeded into the Hall. First went his Gentlemen, then a Herald; next the Aldermen, another Herald; the Attorney General; then the Judges (of whom Serjeant Hill was one, being made a Baron of the Exchequer, June 16.) then Norroy, the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, and the Seal carried by Commissioner Fiennes, then Garter, and after him the Earl of Warwick with the Sword borne before the Protector, bare-headed, the Lord Mayor Tishborn receiving the City Sword (being the special Coke of the Protector) by his left hand: Being seated in his Chair, on the left hand whereof stood the said Turkish and the Dutch Ambassador, the French Ambassador and the Earl of Warwick on the Right; next behind him stood his Sons Richard, Fleetwood, Gleyddole, and the Privy Counsel; upon a lower descent stood the Lord Viscount Lisle, Lords Montague and Whitlock with drawn Swords.

Then the Speaker (Sir Thomas Widdrington) in the name of the Parliament, presented to him a Robe of Purple-Velvet, a Bible, a Sword, and a Scepter, at the Delivery of these things, the Speaker made a short Comment upon them to the Protector which he divided into four parts as followeth.

1. The Robe of Purple; This is an Emblem of Magistracy, and imports Righteousnesse and Justice: When you have put on this Vestment; I may say you are a Govern-man. This Robe is of a mixt colour, to shew the mixture of Justice and Mercy. Indeed a Magistrate must have two hands, Plectentem & amplexentem, to cherish, and to punish. 2. The Bible, it is a Book that contains the Holy Scriptures, in which you have the happinesse to be well taught. This Book of Life consists of two Testaments the Old and New: the first shews Christum Velatum, the second Christum Revelatum: Christ veiled and revealed: it is a Book of Books, and doth contain both Precepts and Examples for good Government.

3. Here is a Scepter, not unlike a Staff; for you are to be a Staff to the weak and poor; it is of ancient use in this kind. It's said in Scripture, that The Scepter shall not depart from Judah. It was of the like use in other Kingdomes; Homer the Greek Poet calls Kings and Princes Scepter-Bearers. 4. The

4. The last thing is a Sword, not a Military but Civil Sword; it is a Sword rather of defence than offence: not to defend your self only, but your People also. If I might presume to fix a Motto upon this Sword, as the valiant Lord Talbor had upon his, it should be this, Ego sum Domini Protectoris, ad protegendum populum meum, I am the Lord Protector to protect my people.

This Speech being ended, the Speaker took the Bible and gave the Protector his Oath: afterwards Mr. Manton made a prayer, wherein he recommended the Protector, Parliament, Council, the Forces by Land and Sea, Government and People of the three Nations to the protection of God. Which being ended, the Heralds by Trumpets proclaimed his Highness Protector of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and the Dominions thereunto belonging: requiring all persons to yield him due obedience. At the end of all, the Protector with his Train carried by the Lord Sherrard, Warwick's Nephew, and the Lord Roberts his eldest Son, returned in the same posture, the Earl of Warwick sitting at one end of the Coach against him, Richard his Son, and Whitlock in one, and the Lords Lisle and Mountague in the other Boot, with Swords drawn, and the Lord Clepsle Master of the Horse, led the Horse of Honour in rich Caparisons to Whitehall. The Members to the Parliament House, where they adjourned their sitting to the 20 day of January.

He was now settled and established in his first assumed Dignity, to the satisfaction of some part of the Army; only Lambert was gruelled with that clause in which it gave the Protector power to name his Successor. Whereby he saw himself deprived and frustrated of his Hopes, and that Contract that had passed between them. Cromwel therefore to secure himself, set the Army Regiment after Regiment to subscribe Addresses congratulating his legal Authority, and declaring their readiness to assert Him therein with their lives and Fortunes; being the very same Method Lambert used before to prevent any Designs against him in the Army, when he was left upon his own bottom by the Parliament before.

In the mean time a more potent enterprize was formed by the Kings Interest, and the appearance of the Marquis of Ormond (as my Lord Wilmot from beyond Sea, was engaged before in Penruddock's rising in the West) about Sussex, whither some English forces for Flanders in the Kings pay and service were to have been transmitted; but by the traiterous discovery of two former eminent Royalists, whom Cromwel by great pensions had corrupted, one a Knight, the other a Minister, and one that had a hand in the killing of Rainsborough, the whole Intrigue was discovered, the Marquis narrowly escaping back again to the King, who was dispatching General Marsin with his Forces then in readiness.

He was no sooner rid of the danger of this, but he was puzzled with Lambert's Cabal, who had inveigled and almost debauch'd Fleetwood and Desborough, Cromwel's nearest Relations with his but emulous pretended Democratick principles; so that Cromwel (having dissolved the Parliament at their access in January, when according to the new Instrument they met in a full House, and began, and were resolved to undo all again that had passed during their Seclusion, nor would own the other House of upstart Mechanick Lords, but flew so high as the bring-bringing Oliver into question for those confusions of the State) was now in as ticklish a condition as ever; therefore Lambert was gently laid aside, and his Commission taken from him, and his Regiments disposed to better hands, and Spies and Eves-droppers dispersed through the Army to give him intelligence of their Affections and Inclinations.

This made him most suspiciously fearful, so that he began to dread every person or strange face he saw (which he would anxiously and intently view) for an Assassinate, that Book of Killing no Murderer perpetually running in his mind; It was his constant Custom to shift and change his lodging, to which he passed through twenty several locks, and out of which he had four or five waies to avoid pursuit: when he went between White-hal and Hampton-Court, by private and back waies, but never the same way backward and forward, he was alwaies in a Hurry, his Guards behind and before riding a full Gallop, and the Coach alwaies filled, especially the Boot with Armed persons, he himself being furnished with private weapons; and was now of more than difficult access to all persons.

A Plot was again on foot, and like a Mongril design that had no issue, was made up one half by the Cavalier, and the other half by himself (who was sure not to be behind hand in such designs) for which Sir Henry Slingsby, and Dr. Hewyt, and three other private persons lost their lives by a High Court of Justice, the severity whereof so afflicted or affected the mind of his Daughter Cleypole, that falling sick with the pains and torments of an—Ulcer, in her Intestines, and the stopping of her terms, which made her frantick, she never ceased roaring against that bloody man her Father.

He

He was now again adorned with another Success and Triumph, by the Defeat of the Spanish Army and Surrender of Dunkirk into his hands, Lockhart, his Kinsman and General of the English Forces, being made Governour thereof: which I am constrained to pass without any further remark, and from the height of this glory, level him with the dust of other Mortals.

The Kingdom was now almost stupified and tired out with struggling against his Government and Domination, when it pleased God to call him to an account of all that Mischief he had perpetrated; ushering his End with a great Whale some 3 months before, on the 2 of June, that came up as far as Greenwich, and was there killed, and more immediately by a terrible Storm of wind; the prognosticks that the great Leviathan of men, that Tempest and overthrow of Government, was now going to his own place.

He was taken sick at Hampton-Court, having not been well in mind some time before (troubled with the last frantic words of his beloved Daughter Cleopatra, who threatened Judgement like another mad Cassandra, and with the insinuations and encroachments of the Republican party into the Army; nor were most of his Relations tainted-free of those principles, were but winding towards them) the disease was a bastard Tertian which appeared not at first of any danger, but after a weeks time it began to shew very desperate Symptoms; wherefore he was removed to Whitehall, where his Chaplains and others of that pious Family, kept private meetings and Fasts for his recovery; of which they were so vainly confident that they obtruded their unseasonable thanks to God for the certainty of it, and with the same same unseasonable flattery and pick-thank with the Protector, deluded him into the like persuasion, so that he told his Physicians, He should not die this hour; but the Fits proving worse and worse, and causing him to rail wildly, and to faint often; They in Council concluded, he could scarce survive another Paroxysm; at which the Privy Council being astonished, they immediately repaired to him about his settling a Successor, whom by the Petition he was to declare in his life-time; but he was then scarce himself, which they perceiving, interrogated him, if he appointed not his son Richard? whereunto he answer'd in the Affirmative. It was supposed that he had designed Electra in his ultimate thoughts, but the distraction of the choice betwixt his Son and Son in Law, had made him leave it undetermined (a private Will he made at his first Sickness at Hampton Court.) Continuing in this condition, he died on Friday the said 3 of September at 3 of the Clock in the Afternoon, though divers rumors were spread, that he was carried away in the Tempest the day before; his body being opened and Embalmed, his Milt was found full of corruption and filth, which was so strong and stinking, that after the Corps were Embalmed and filled with Aromatick Odours, and wrapt in Cerecloth, six double, in an inner sheet of Lead, and a strong Wooden Coffin, yet the filth broke through them all, and raised such a noisome stink, that they were forced to bury him out of hand; but his name and memory stinks worse.

The Corps (presently after his expiration) being buried for the aforesaid reason, a Coffin was on the 26 of September, about 10 at night privately removed from White hall in a Mourning Horse, attended ded by his Domestick Servants, none of whom shed one Tear, to Somerset-House, where it remained in private for some daies; till all things were in readiness for publick view; which being accomplished, his Effigies was with great state and magnificence exposed openly; multitudes daily flocking to see the sight which appeared in this order.

The first room where the Spectators entred, was wholly hung with Black: at the upper end whereof, was placed a Cloth and Chair of State: In like manner was the second and third, all having Scutcheons very thick upon the Walls, and Guards of Partizans placed in each room for people to pass through. The fourth room was completely hung with black Velvet the Cieling being of the same; here lay the Effigies with a large Canopy of Black Velvet fringed, which hung over it. The Waxen Picture lying upon its back apparrell'd in a rich suit of Velvet, robed in a little Robe of Purple Velvet, laced with a rich gold Lace, fur'd with Ermines: upon the Kirtle was a large Robe of Purple Velvet, laced and fur'd as the former, with rich strings and tassels of Gold. The Kirtle was girt with a rich embroidered Belt, wherein was a Sword bravely gilt and hatched with gold, which hung by the side of this fine thing. In the right hand was a Scepter, in the left a Globe; upon his head was placed a Purple-Velvet-Cap furred with Ermines, sutable to the Robes; behind the head was placed a rich Chair of Tissued gold. whereon was placed an Imperial crown which lay high that the people might behold it. The Bed of State whereon he lay, was covered with a large Pall of Black-velvet, under which was a Holland Sheer, born up by six stools covered with Cloth of Gold. About the Bed was placed a complete Sute of Arms, and at the feet of the Effigies stood his Crest. This Bed had fixt about it an Ascent of two steps, a little from thence stood 8 silver Candlesticks, about 5 foot high, with white wax Tapers standing in them, of three foot long. All these things were environed with Rails and Ballasters foursquare covered with Velvet; at each corner thereof was erected an upright pillar, which bore on their tops Lions and Dragons, who held in their paws Streamers crowned. On both sides of the Bed were set up in Sockets, four great Standards of the Protestors Arms, with Banners and Banrols of War, painted upon Taffaty, about the Bed stood men in mourning bareheaded; and without the Rails others to receive people in, and turn them out again.
complete

When this shew had been seen for many weeks together, the Scene was then altered; the Effigies being removed into another room, it was there set up, standing upon an Ascent under a Cloath of State; being vested as it was before, lying: only now his purple-Velvet-Cap was changed for a Crown. In the same manner (as formerly) were men waiting upon him bare-headed. In this manner he continued until the 23 of Nov. which day was appointed to carry him in solemnity to Westminster-Abby.

This great Funeral was performed with very great state, in this manner following. All things being in readines, the Waxen Picture of the Protector (with a Crown on his head, a Sword by his side, a Globe and Scepter in his hands) was taken down from his standing, and laid in an open Chariot, covered all over with black Velvet, and adorned with most gaudy and flanting Plumes and Scutcheons, and drawn by 6 horses in black velvet. The Streets from Somerset-house to Westminster-Abby, were guarded by Soldiers in new Red-coats and Black Buttons, with their Ensigns wrapt in Cypress; which made a Lane to keep off Spectators from crowding the Actors.

The Procession.

In the first place went a Marshal attended by his Deputy, and 13 more on Horse-back, to clear the way; after him followed the poor men of Westminster by two and two in Mourning Gowns and Hoods; next to them, the Servants of those persons of Quality that attended the Funeral. These were followed by the Protectors late domestic Servants, with his Bargi-men and Water-men. Then came the Servants of the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs of London. Following them, were Gentlemen Attendants on Foreign Ambassadors and Publick Ministers. After marched the poor Knights of Windsor in Gowns and Hoods: then the Clerks, Secretaries, and Officers of the Army, Admiralty, Treasury, Navy, and Exchequer: next, the Commissioners of the Excise, of the Army, and Committee of the Navy. Then the Commissioners for approbation of Preachers: behind these followed all the Officers, Messengers and Clerks belonging to the Privy Council, and both Houses of Parliament. Next in order followed his Physicians, The head Officers of the Army, the Officers and Aldermen of London, The Masters of Chancery, and Oliver's Council at Law, the Judges of Admiralty, Judges of both Benches, and Lord Mayor of London, The Persons allied to the Protector, and the Members of the other House, the publique Ministers of Foreign Princes, The Holland Ambassador alone, having his Train held up by 4 Gentlemen. Then the Portugal Ambassador, in like manner. The Commissioners of the great Seal. The Commissioners of the Treasury. The Members of the Privy Council. All the Grandees in close Mourning.

Mourning (but it was once advised otherwise for fear of a surprise in the streets) the rest but in ordinary.

The whole Assembly, passing along in divisions, were distinguished by Drums, Trumpets, Banners, and Horses; whereof there were eleven in all, four being covered with black Cloth, and seven in Velvet. These passing in fine order, at length came the Chariot with the Effigies, on each side of which were six Banner-Rolls, (twelve in all) borne by several persons; and likewise several pieces of the Protectors Arms, carried by eight Officers of the Army, attended by the Heralds. Next went Garter principal King of Arms, attended by a Gentleman on each hand bare-headed. Next came the Chief Mourner. And to conclude all, came the Horse of Honour, in very rich Trappings imbroidered on Crimson Velvet, and adorned with white, red, and yellow plumes of Feathers, being led by the Master of the Horse. The Rear of this brave shew was brought up by the Protectors Guard of Halberdiers, the Warders of the Tower, and a Troop of Horse.

The Effigies in this manner being brought to the West-Gate of the Abby Church of Westminster, it was taken from the Chariot by ten Gentlemen, who carried it to the East-end of the Church, and there placed the Picture in a most magnificent Structure, built in the same form as one before had been (on the like occasion) for K. James, but much more stately,

And here he lodged and usurped a grave, the impatient Spectator fretting at this pompous Mummery and Magnificent Cheat, taking his Funeral Triumphs for a more solemn Cozenage of the Executioner, till the due inevitable Justice of Heaven found him out, after the reduction of His Sacred Majesty in peace to His Kingdoms, which would very difficultly have been accomplished, if this resolute destroyer had survived to that blessed time. On

On the 30 day of January, 1660, that day 12 years of his most nefarious patricide, his Cordials with Bradshaw and Ireton, having been digged out of their Graves, were carried to the Red-Lyon in Holborn, and from thence drawn in Sledges to Tyburn, where they hanged from Ten of the Clock in the morning till Sun-set, with their Faces towards White-hall, and were then inhumed under the Gallows, and his Head set upon Westminster-Hall to be the becoming Spectacle of his Treason, where on that Pinnacle and Legal Advancement it is fit to leave this Ambitious Wretch.

*Lord what villany have been acted
vnd pretence of religion*

FINIS.

